VIOLA'S REVENGE.

By the Author of "My Lady's Secret," "A Waif's Fortune," "The Lady of Gordon Lea," &c.

"A year hence I shall be married" said Clara, with quiet decision.

"Indeed! May I ask to whom?"

"To William Burgot."

"William Burgot has never bestowed a thought upon you of a matrimonial nature."

"I know it."

"Dear Clara," responded the widow, with as much irritation in her dulcet tones as they were ever permitted to express—will you or will you not leave this game of 'cross purposes and crooked answers'—and explain?"

"I think I will," answered her daughter, somewhat dubiously. "The very next time Lord Armidale calls, I want you to contrive that I see him alone, and put into execution that bold coup you vaguely recommended just now."

"And if it fails? He will very likely be here to-day. I thought I heard the sound of a horse at a gallop just now."

"If it fails, I shall fall back upon middle-aged William Burgot, with his fifteen thousand a year. If he had only a third of the money, I would marry him in spite of Viola. You must make the way smooth by affecting, in consulting with him, maternal anxiety on account of the variableness of my spirits, hinting——"

"Lord Armidale is asking for Miss Viola, ma'am. Can you tell me where I shall find her? interrupted, at that instant, a somewhat simple footman, whom the master of the house had recently engaged, without first taking Mrs. Robert's opinion upon his merits. At the time she had almost resented the omission as a slight. Now she remembered it with thankfulness.

"I will tell Viola," answered the lady sweetly, rising. "Wilkins, you can ask Lord Armidale to await her here."

So it came to pass that his lordship, crossing the threshold, saw a room which he took to be empty until a smothered sob arrested his attention. Then he saw a slender girlish figure lying at full length, face downward, upon the sofa, the girl's shoulders heaving as with suppressed, but almost uncontrollable emotion.

Miss Dallas!" he cried: but the figure did not stir. "Miss Dallas! Clara!"

He was close beside her now, Mrs. Robert—who, the coast being quite clear, was taking observations through the key-hole—observed with much satisfaction. But as yet his exclamations had won no response.

The mourner moved her head a little, as though to conceal her face yet more effectually. Just the tip of a shell-like ear and part of the contour of a peach-like cheek were visible now; and—quite by accident, of course,—a small white hand peeped out invitingly from amongst the folds of her dress.

He began to feel a very honest, genuine, manly compassion for a woman in distress; also, being a man, he was sensible that the situation was not without its charm, and that it would be rather a pleasant occupation to wipe away the tears of this pretty grieving doll. Why, once upon a time, he confessed to an infinitesmal tendresse for the girl; and he still retained a sincere liking for her. So he took possession of the small hand, and was gratified to discover that it returned his pressure.

"Dear Clara, what is your grief?" he asked. "May an old friend claim the right to comfort you?"

Mrs. Robert, watching the scene from her post of espial, could not use both eyes and ears at the same moment; and, although she felt she would almost give the latter to overhear the dialogue, it was even more interesting to study the action.

Mrs. Robert was so engrossed by her study that she faled to detect the approach of the footman, who had not sense enough to beat a stealthy and noiseless retreat.

"If you please 'm——"

"What is it," inquired Mrs. Robert, with a face of crimson.

"If you please 'm, Miss Viola is in the green-house."

"Thank you. I could not find her. Oh Wilkins, take away this mat and shake it. I think I dropped a shilling amongst the wool just now."

She turned away sick at heart; for she read in the man's face the utter incredulity with which he received the order. Her spying would be the talk of the servants' hall, and it was a sad blow to have been detected in the meanness; so sad a blow that she could scarcely console herself by the reflection how well "Dear Clara's" grand coup was succeeding.

"Call me Miss Dallas!" wailed that astute young lady, clutching convulsively at the fingers which had clasped her own. "Why stab me in the heart with kindness which recalls too—too vividly days when no one had come between—days when we were all in all to each other?"

Very gently, but firmly, Lord Armidale disengaged his hand, and at the corners of his lips a half-smile began to show itself. The acting had been very good, and he had been completely deceived by it; but that last sentence, so unmistakable in its meaning, so exaggerated and untruthful, convinced him that he was a witness of acting only.

"Miss Dallas," he said in that tone of easy jocose politeness before which even true sentiment hides its diminished head, "I cannot accept the compliment you are good enough—in jest or irony—to pay me. But one woman in the world has ever been all in all to me, and that woman is——"

"Viola Burgot!" cried Clara snappishly.

"Just so. I am here, hoping to find her alone."

The brief silence that followed was more embarrassing perhaps to Lord Armidale than to the outstretched figure on the lounge.

When Miss Dallas spoke again it was in her ordinary accents, languid, conventional, emotionless, with only a soupçon of earnestness in very their monotony.

"My lord," she said, "you are too true a gentleman, I know, to enjoy this morning's triumph. Will you try to forget it, and spare me the mortification of believing that garbled account is amusing the gossips of the neighborhood?"

"I will never speak of it in any circumstances."

"You are very kind and good, my lord. Viola is making a tour of the greenhouses; you will find her in one of them."

CHAPTER X.

There he found her, amongst green tendrils and spreading leaves and rich fruit-clusters; in her hand a bunch of purple grapes.

Purple grapes! For a moment his eyes grew dim, and he saw again an Italian sky and an Italian sea, a shattered column and a headless Apollo, an idle fountain, and in its shade a girl sleeping.

Then he came back to reality. No nut-brown southern maid was this, with shabby frock and bare foot—dainty and blue-veined—peeping from beneath it; but a proud patrician Englishwoman, whose pale loveliness of feature expressed nothing but aristocratic repose. As she gave him a slender hand, soft and white, and almost as cold as snow, he was tempted to wish that it were the hard brown palm of long ago.

Was the artificial existence in which she now lived and moved and had her being quite as grateful to her as the free wild life in which he saw her first? It was borne in upon him that she pined for something as he stood there, speaking to her mutely with the tender pressure of the hand. Could his love supply it? Why were there dark shadows under her beautiful eyes? What was the cause of the unnatural pallor of her cheek and the icy coldness of her little fingers? A weird and horrible fancy came to him about death in life. Would it not be well to break down this frigid unnatural composure, even though it were replaced by the anger and the scorn which startled him in the fair white moonlight long, long ago?

"Give me a peace-offering, Viola," he whispered. "I stole your grapes once, do you remember, as you slept in the shade? Give me a bunch now in token that you have forgiven me for that offence and all others."

Did she hear the pleading whisper? She made no sign as she stood there, listless and still, and let him draw the grapes from listless fingers.

"Oh, my darling—my darling, did we not love each other in the dear old days?"

She shivered a little—shivered in the stifling hot-house air; but otherwise her apathy was quite unmoved. At any cost, he thought he would rouse her; hot anger were far better than this.

"The love wronged and insulted you," he cried; "but it was faithful always. I went forth from your presence, and became a wanderer on the face of the earth. I dared not return, but I could not forget. I sought in many lands for one who might take your place; but I could not find her, Viola my beloved. I found many women—and some of them were beautiful—whose wealth would have redeemed from debt the lands I hold in trust for my children, but I could not marry. Oh, my dearest—my own dear love, do not let the past rise like a wall between us! Forgive me and be my wife!"

At last she turned towards him, at last he thought she was moved by his appeal. He almost stretched his arms towards her with a quick instinctive gesture of invitation; but they fell again to his side as he looked into her lustrous eyes.

He had seen them glow with indignation, flash with scorn, sparkle with rage, and he would rather have encountered those three evils than have met that steady glassy stare. In the dear old days he had seen those glorious orbs melt with love. There was no tenderness, no human passion, no human feeling, in them now. Her lips moved, and he nerved himself to accept dismissal sadly, but with patient fortitude, as a man should do.

"Lord Armidale, I will be your wife."

It was so unexpected, that assenting rejoinder, that for an instant, in the reaction from his fears, he forgot the strangeness of her manner. He had possessed himself of her ice cold hands, and he would have drawn her to his breast, but that there was no maidenly yielding, half-willing, half coy, to his embrace.

"You must spare me that for the present," not in hurried protest, but with listless measured calmness. Looking into her lovely face, he noticed how haggard and wan it was, how distinct were the dark circles which told of sleeplessness and mental pain.

"Say that you love me, Viola?" he cried passionately.

She took a second or two to consider her reply. He could almost hear his heart throbbing in the stillness. When she spoke, it seemed to him as though with mental effort she was recalling an answer she had learned by rote.

"Once I loved you; now I have promised to be your wife. Once I wore my heart on my sleeve, and I suffered; now you will not see my heart until we are joined together by vows that cannot be riven asunder."

"And then? And then, Viola, my beloved?"

She made an attempt to smile; there played upon her features a ghastly mockery of mirth, a counterfeited playfulness.

"Long ago," she said, "I told you you had yet to learn how an Italian girl could hate; and in my tortured heart I vowed to be revenged. The day I become your wife my revenge will have begun."

CHAPTER XI.

"Fifteen thousand a year, a house like Burgot Grange—which to me appears as perfect as modern architectural skill can devise—and three beautiful women to make one happy in it. Your lot, Burgot, is about as blissful as the human imagination can conceive," murmured Colonel Pettitt slowly.

He looked more than ever like a stage Mephistopheles, as holding a glass of ruby wine to the light, he half closed one eye, and the other peered, not at the wine, but round the rim of the glass, at his host. The bushy upturned eyebrows and the scanty upturned mustache seemed to his vis-a-vis to question, with a sinister twist, the reality of the bliss of which he spoke.

William Burgot shifted uneasily upon his chair, although he answered with a light laugh and affected carelessness—

"I suppose one of the beautiful women will soon be trying to make another happy. I was told so in rather plain language this afternoon."

"By Lord Armidale?" said the Colonel, "By Jove! I thought as much when I saw the pointedness of that young fellow's attention at dinner, and I felt sure of it when he rushed away just now from the choicest claret I have tasted for a blue moon. I congratulate you, Mr. Burgot, with all my heart. Is she fond of him, do you think?"

"It would be odd if she were not—the finest, handsomest, grandest-looking gentleman in the shire, run after by half the women for twenty miles round. Why do you ask, Pettitt?"

"Because her manner is particularly cold and indifferent, that is all. Ah, we little thought when we used to reckon up our chances at Bungalore, that we should be sitting here at this instant, one of us the prospective father-in-law of a real live lord—eh, Burgot, my boy?"

For once Colonel Pettitt's speech was hearty and truthful, with no under-current of insincerity. Sitting at the table of this county magnate, drinking his wine, and contemplating his greatness, he forgot vague suspicions Had William Burgot met that remark frankly and easily, they might never again have been arcused.

But, instead of doing so, he rose hurriedly from the table, upsetting a wine-glass in his clumsy haste, and exhibiting far more discomposure than the trivial accident warranted.

"I hate the very name of Bungalore; and it angers me to be reminded of those old Indian experiences!" he said. "It—it makes me think of the quarrel with my brother. Let us join the ladies."

With a perplexed but significant smile upon his rather handsome countenance, the Colonel followed. As they entered the drawing-room, Clara looked up with a little smile of welcome and drew aside the skirt of her dress, revealing a vacant chair.

"May I dare to interpret that movement as gesture of invitation, Miss Dallas?" asked the Colonel, bending his head to whisper the interrogation.

William Burgot, too much absorbed to heed the by-play or the bright responsive smile, marched to his favorite chair, and thither Mrs. Robert followed him.

"I have not yet had a chance to congratulate you upon our dear Viola's happiness," said the lady, in that soft low voice of hers.

"Thank you very much," he replied absently.

"I am sure you have my warmest sympathy. Only a parent understands the pure joy which one can feel in the bliss of a beloved child; and only a parent"—here Mrs. Robert took out a lace-bordered handkerchief and applied it delicately but effectively to the corners of her eyes—"only a parent knows the misery of seeing a daughter's affections blighted and a settled melancholy growing upon her."

"You don't mean to say, Mrs. Robert," answered William Burgot, with sudden interest and a faint recollection that he had more than once suspected Miss Dallas of "setting her cap" at the young nobleman, who was now his daughter's accepted lover—"that Clara has a sneaking kindness for Lord Armi——"

"Blind man!" cried the widow reproachfully.

"Who is it then? I do not know—"

"Of course you do not know!" exclaimed Mrs. Robert with as much vehemence as a whisper could express. "But I ought to have known, William, that when a free woman and a free man are living on terms of pleasant and almost affectionrte intimacy beneath the same roof, one of them—and generally, alas, the poor woman—comes in time to desure ——"

But here the widow's voice faltered, and she appeared to weep behind her lace-bordered handkerchief.

"The woman is in love with me," thought William Burgot, laying that flattering unction to his soul with masculine complacency. "But, my dear Mrs. Robert," he continued, "have you forgotten the Table of Kindred and Affinity?"

"The Table of Kindred and Affinity has been my preservation, William; but for poor Clara there has been no such safeguard."

"You don't mean——"

"Oh, no, I mean nothing—nothing, except that her poor cheeks get paler and paler and her fluctuations of spirits grow more and more marked daily: that when you speak kindly to her she brightens up and seems feverishly gay, and, when you neglect her, she looks simply wretched! Oh! I mean nothing; for not even to her own mother will she reveal the truth! But I have eyes as well as other people."

"Bless my soul!" exclaimed William Burgot, aghast.

"It is not a match for you, of course. With your large income you look with contempt upon the money which will be hers when I am gone, and the five thousand poor Duke left her. I dare say we seem to be paupers in your eyes, William Burgot; but paupers have hearts, I fear, as my dear girl knows to her cost."

"But—but, Mrs. Robert, you don't think she really cares for me?"

"Ask her," rejoined the lady emphatically.

"I—I will think of it," he said.

At that moment he was asking himself whether, bearing in mind certain unpleasant contingencies, it might not be well to 'hedge' against Fate by securing that modest fortune of which Mrs. Robert spoke with such vehement depreciation.

It was a model apartment, the drawing-room of Burgot Grange, quite large enough for three couples to be conversing out of ear-shot of each other. It would seem that the "feverish gay" mood was upon "dear Clara," and her manner towards the Colonel was decidedly suggestive of an incipient flirtation. Very different was the demeanour of the lovers whose vows of betrothal had that day been spoken.

Viola was at the piano, playing apparently from memory, for there was no music open upon the rack. Lord Armidale, in a low chair at her feet, had composed himself to listen. He watched the girl's beautiful face with a lover's admiration, but with perplexity such as an accepted lover ought not to feel.

Was he seeking a clue to the enigma in the sweet sounds that arose as the long white fingers swept the keys? She was thinking of her revenge. For it was not destined to be the less sure and deadly because William Burgot's revelation had modified its form.

She had intended to carry out her scheme as originally planned; intended to let him plead for her love and show her all his heart; and then to wound him with cruel words and bitter taunts and scoffing gibes, such as should pursue him—in memory—until they had avenged the bitterness of the hour when he had insulted her in the fair white moonlight.

But would not that revenge be a brief triumph? Sooner or later it would transpire perhaps that she, being illegitimate by English law, was no better than an impostor; that she wasnot, intruth, a great lady and rich heiress, but merely the poor Italian peasant-girl to whom he had in the first instance proffered light love and light fealty, as to one unworthy to be his wife. Discovering the truth, would not he congratulate himself upon a fortunate escape?

HAVE COURAGE.—You may suffer from scrofula or some foul humor, your liver may be conjested, your lungs diseased, your kidneys deranged, your joints distorted with rheumatism, you may be almost a walking skeleton, yet despair not. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS has cured others—it may cure you.

ENCOURAGING WEDLOCK.

A SCHEME TO PROMOTE MATRIMONY AMONG THE MASSES.

At the next meeting of the Ontario Legislature, application will be made for the incorporation of the National Marriage Dowry Association. The object of the promoters of the scheme is in all probability to make money, but the result of their quest of money will undoubtedly be to encourage the man and the maid to wed. The society first began its operations in Indiana, and is now casting its benevolent arms over the bachelors and spinsters in other states, territories, and provinces. In the words of the circular the association is established "to encourage lawful wedlock, to promote economy, to endow homes and to make married life the end and aim of the rich and poor alike." The scheme is as follows:—Supposing John Smith, on this 18th day of August, casts his lot in with the association. He pays in the first place $5 for his certificate, and a semi-annual payment thereafter of $1. In case some of his co-insurers marry, and there not being sufficient funds in the treasurer's hands to pay the sum to which the newly-married man is entitled, an assessment of $1 is levied all round. These are the payments to which he is liable. The benefits are, that should he marry on the 18th of August, 1882, he is entitled to $200. Should his marriage not occur for five years, he would be be entitled to $1,000, and so on. We don't suppose the ladies are excluded from the association. It's a grand scheme. Any young lady who was known to have one of these certificates would be the observed of al observers, and the admired of all admirers. At church and market places she would not want for swains. When the scheme is once in full swing the crop of marriages would be a couple of hundred bushels to the acre. In a few years it will be hard to find an unmarried person over twenty-two years of age. The manufacture of cradles and baby carriages will become two of the chief industries of the country, and happiness and general joy will extend from Halifax to New Westminister.

TRY BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS; the great system renovator, blood and liver syrup, acts on the bowels, liver and kidneys, and is a superb tonic.

FROM BED TO BOARD.

THE MAN WHO SOLD HIS WIFE FOR A DOLLAR.

[From the New York Tribune.]

A. Lauten, a manufacturer of jewelers' cases, in Great Jones street in this city, lives at Tenth avenue and Second street Mount Vernon. About a year ago he hired Ferdinand Janren, a builder of West Mount Vernon, to put up a house for him. While the work was in progress Mr. Jansen had many opportunities of seeing Mrs. Lauten, a woman who weighs 250 pounds. They became very intimate and were accustomed to meet frequently. This was noticed by the neighbors, and anonymous letters were sent to Mr. Lauten informing him of the fact. His wife, however, explained them to his satisfaction. About six weeks ago Mrs. Lauten however, absented herself from home for three days. When she returned she declined to say where she had been, but made a confession to her husband of her love for Jansen. It was subsequently ascertained that she and Jansen had been stopping at a hotel at Farmingdale, Long Island, as husband and wife.

Recently Jansen called at the house of Mr. Lauten, apparently ignorant that his intimacy with Mrs. Lauten had become known. Mr. Lauten met him, and in the discussion which followed made some bitter remarks about his wife's conduct. She heard them and immediately went to her room. She soon returned with pen, ink and paper, and said to her husband: "Now, I want to see whether you are man enough to state on that paper that you will sell me to Jansen for one dollar." Mr. Lauten expressed his readiness to do so and Jansen gave him the money. Mrs. Lauten said that she was willing to be sold for the dollar. Friday last Mrs. Lauten removed from her house a load of furniture, pictures and jewels which her husband had previously given her. At the same time Jansen removed a load of furniture from his house in West Mount Vernon, and the two loads were driven together to Lexington avenue and One-hundred and second street, where Jansen and his dollar companion have taken up their abode. Mrs. Lauten as she left her Mount Vernon home is said to have shed some tears.

Mr. Lauten has begun a suit in the Supreme Court of this city for an absolute divorce from his wife. On the other hand, Mrs. Caroline Jansen has begun a suit for divorce from her husband. While Jansen was absent from his home with Mrs. Lauten, his wife sold for $1,200 the building which she and her husband had occupied, of which she was the owner.

IT NEVER FAILS.—Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is an unfailing remedy for all kinds of bowel complaint.

NOVELTIES IN SWINDLING.

HOW THE INGENIOUS SHARPERS OF THE CITY KEEP AHEAD OF THE TIMES.

"The old trick of swindling verdant people whovisit themetropolis are playing out, and it has been found necessary for the sharpers to invent new ones," said one of Pinkerton's detectives to a reporter of the Star, one day last week. "Such old time dodges as mock auctions, dropping pocket-books stuffed with paper, and confidence games, have been so thoroughly exposed that the dupes are so few in number that it does not pay the sharpers to follow the business."

"Once in a great while a country man is coaxed into purchasing a worthless watch under the impression that he is getting a great bargain. The victim in such a case, however, must have hailed from the most remote rustic region of the Green Mountain State, or from some other locality equally as secluded."

"What is the most favored method of swindling at the present day?"

"Advertising for partners."

"How is that?"

"Well, some fellow, having exhausted all other methods of making money, causes to be inserted in the newspapers an announcement that he is the proprietor of a valuable patented invention which he is anxious to introduce in the market; but, unfortunately, he does not possess sufficient capital. If some person who has the means will invest and take an equal share in the enterprise great returns can be expected."

"And are their many gudgeons who will take such a bait?"

"Plenty of them. There is a glamour that usually surrounds patent right enterprises which is as seductive as a lottery."

"Will capitalists invest money without adequate security?"

"Yes; that is, they will take an interest in a worthless invention in return for their cash, and actually believe that they are getting the big end of an immense bargain. Within a short time they find that the so called wonderful scheme is unremunerative, and that they have nothing to show for the money they have invested."

"Why do not the swindled parties seek redress in the courts?"

"Because they have been defrauded in a legal manner—that is, technically they have no grounds for going to law in the matter. They have bought a pig in a poke, and must abide by the consequences."

"Cannot the swindlers be arrested and punished for obtaining money under false pretenses?"

"No; because the value of a patent right is a thing that depends a great deal upon luck and chances, and it can be argued that an invention which is worthless to-day may be valuable in the future."

Another comparatively new method of swindling is by what is known as the game of "tossing the ball," which is in successful operation at many places in the city. It may be described as follows:—A wooden figure, representing a man, is set up, and the game is to toss a rubber ball into its wide open mouth or great staring eyes. The feat seems perfectly easy of accomplishment, and there are plenty of verdant men and boys who are willing to pay a small sum for the chance of winning a prize. The swindle consists in the hollow rubber ball being made with one side thicker and heavier than the other, so that it is next to impossible to throw them with any certainty of aim. It is said that this little contrivance for duping the unwary is almost as profitable as the three card monte game, even when the latter was in its balmy days.—N. Y. Star.

THE GREATEST POPULARITY OF DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY is where it has been longest known. Time cannot detract from its merits. It is the old reliable remedy for all bowel complaints incident to the summer season.

Mr. John Carr, of Holland Landing, Ont., is the owner of a feline animal which gave birth about a week ago, as he supposed, to several kittens. On Sunday last, hearing the young serenaders making considerable noise he proceeded to the haymow, whence the mewing came, when, to his astonishment, he found six kittens all united together at the thighs by a ligament—the hind legs of the several animals being crossed and mixed up. It is a singular freak of nature and since the fact has become known that Mr. Carr has such a natural curosity, scores of people have called to see for themselves. They are all alive, and if Mr. C. can succeed in rearing them no doubt Cole's combination will pay him handsomely for them when visiting Newmarket in September next.

MEAFORD ROAD.

From our own Correspondent.

THERE has not been anything very exciting taken place here lately. All hands being busy engaged taking care of the harvest products for which the weather has been all that could be desired. The crops have been good and have been saved in good condition, and with a few exceptions are all secured.

There has not been much threshing done here yet, but what has been threshed has turned out well, in some cases the yield has been great. Mr. Wm. Somers threshed three acres of barley which yielded over 50 bushels to the acre. This beats the case noted by the STANDARD some time ago.

Messrs. J. Rowe and Wm. Bielby are going for a tour of inspection to the great lone land. We wish them success in their mission, they intend starting in about two weeks.

Mr. Thomas Gilbert lost a threshing machine in the barn of Mr. Warner, burned by lightning some time ago. Mr. Gilbert has been unfortunate, this being the second machine he has lost in that way; yet he or his sons are still on the war path, having a threshing machine that is equal to the best of them. They can do as big a day's work and do it as well and as cheap as any other machine.

The correspondent of the Advance seemed to think that it was something wonderful that he had to communicate about when he said that the lightning and Vandusen were after Mr. Gilbert; perhaps he is one of the fortunate ones who receives no such visits.

There has been quite an improvement going on here in the shape of new buildings being put up. This shows that the times are improving.

DUNDALK.

From our own Correspondent.

Crops are excellent, and will be all reaped and gathered in this week.

Rev. Mr. Potter gave an eloquent address to a full church last Sabbath evening.

Mr. William Nelson, who has been confined to his bed for some weeks past, is on the mend, and is now considered out of danger.

Stormy Garrett arrived by morning train from Owen Sound gaol, where he has been serving an apprenticeship for abusing his wife and family. Served him right.

Mr. W. J. Hicks will raise his large grain warehouse this week.

SAD ACCIDENT.—A very sad accident happened on the T. G. & B. Railway, near Williamsford Station, last week. Alex. Essan, (son of the contractor of stone bridges and culverts on this end of the above line), while attending to business for his father was on a stone train, and accidently fell between two cars while in motion, several of which passed over his body, killing him instantly. We understand Mr. Essan is the contractor who built the Union Station at Toronto.

OSPREY.

Mr. Thomas Walker, a well-known farmer in the Melanco Settlement, met with an accident, on Aug. 17th, which proved fatal in a very short time.

It appears that he was leaving the field for his barn with a load of sheaves and in passing a piece of the road which was very rough, part of the load fell off and frightened the horses. Mr. Walker, who was sitting near the front of the load, was thrown off and fell on his face, the wheels of the waggon passing over his body lengthwise, completely separating the ribs from the vertibrae, and crushing the right arm at the shoulder. He suffered intense pain for about an hour and forty minutes and then expired—we trust in peace.

Mr. Walker was married only five weeks previous to this sad accident, and therefore leaves a young widow to mourn his loss; also an aged and infirm father, and a brother who is not capable of working the farm on account of defective eyesight.

The members of the bereaved family have the sympathy of all their neighbors and friends.

Harvesting throughout the township is in an advanced stage, and in the course of another week it will be securely housed or stacked. All crops this year are far above the average and vastly superior to any returns they have ever had in this part of the country.

ÆQUANIMITAS.

EUGENIA.

From our own Correspondent.

ROAD COMMISSIONERS.—We have before pointed out some of their inconsistencies of Municipal Councils appointing themselves Road Commissioners. Why not fill all the other offices, viz.:—Assessors, Collectors, Pathmasters, Poundkeepers, &c., &c. No thanks—no money in short. We don't mean to say that all undertake the duty simply for the pecuniary benefit; they are above that. Look at the minutes of the August meeting of the Artemesia council. It was moved by Mr. Pedlar, seconded by Mr. Wright, that Mr. Pedlar see to repairing a certain portion of road that was unsafe for public travel. If all monies were voted in this way it would be all right. This is what you call eating the cow and choking on the tail. That's where the fun is. Did the Commissioner want to make believe that he was extremely anxious to have this road repaired, but could not without the consent of the council. No, that is too thin. No sane man could be made to believe that the council would vote down such a motion, the road being in the Commissioner's ward, they could not interfere with it. Let us read the motion in its true bearing. Moved by the Commissioner for Ward No. 4 that the Commissioner for Ward No. 4 attend to the repairing of certain portions of road in the Commissioner for Ward No. 4's jurisdiction, the same being unsafe for travel. What in the name of Jupiter is the duty of these self-made Commissioners. We would be very little surprised after this to hear of such motions as "I move, seconded by myself, that I be Reeve, or Warden, for the ensuing year—carried." The motion of the Commissioner for Ward No. 4 is the best unintentional vote of censure and condemnation against the system that could have been made, and deserving of much commendation. How long will the people of Artemesia tolerate this system? The pay they receive for letting and inspecting, if placed in the hands of the Overseers of Highways, would be expended in work and repairs on the roads, and there would be no need of bringing motions in Council. They are the men who know where the unsafe places are, and are willing to work when money is being expended, and at the proper season. Perhaps more of this another time.

EUPHRASIA COUNCIL.

A meeting of the Township Council of the Township of Euphrasia was held pursuant to adjournment, on the 30th day of July, 1881. Members all present. Minutes of last session of Court of Revision, and last session of Council, read and approved.

A petition, numerously signed, asking for repairs on 24th and 25th sidelines, laid before Council and accepted, and the Deputy Reeve appointed to attend to the matter.

Messrs. Boyd and Fawcett were appointed to ascertain the circumstances of Mrs. Micks and to authorize the Reeve to take action in her case if necessary.

The statute labor charged against James McGee, struck off road list. The request of Charles Fawcett not complied with, on account of the state of finances. The Reeve, Deputy-Reeve, and Mr. Loughead were appointed a committee to examine the assets and liabilities of the Township, and ascertain what rate must be levied for the current year.

The report of the Financial Committee showing that one cent in the dollar will be required, laid before Council, and a by-law carried through the different stages levying said rate.

Richard Snelgrove, pathmaster, was ordered to get all fences removed from road allowance in his division, on 27th and 28th sideline.

J. D. Crabtree, Esq., John Berry, and Christopher Kelley were appointed a committee to carry out County by-laws establishing a quarterly fair at Rocklyn.

William McConnel, Esq., and George Vickers, Esq., were appointed to value certain work performed on 24 and 25 sideroad.

J. D. Crabtree, Treasurer, authorised to accept $10.84, taxes charged against E. half lot 13, con. 7, and the County Treasurer requested to withdraw said land for sale. The Treasurer instructed to receive $7.60½, the balance by John Clugston, Collector, and to give Mr. Clugston a proper receipt.

By-law No. 304 to borrow $500, carried through the different stages and passed. The Reeve and Treasurer to borrow said amount from W. C. Smith & Co., Bankers, Thornbury.

By-law No. 305, appointing a referee on union school business, carried through the different stages and passed.

Wm. Drinkel was authorized to perform part of his statute labor opposite his own place, to assist him in getting access to highway.

The Reeve and Deputy-Reeve were appointed to get a plan and specification for bridge over Saugeen river on 11th line.

Geo. Cruikshanks exonerated from blame and pecuniary liability for removing stone from 3rd line, and the Clerk to notify the pathmaster to that effect.

The Reeve was authorized to get sideline 3 and 4, con. 1, improved.

James Struthers, Esq., was appointed referee on union school business.

Mr. Gilray was authorized to get improvements made on sideline 3 and 4, con. 7.

A claim for damages to a waggon on the road, made by John Davis, was laid before Council and laid aside for further consideration.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz:

To W. H. Neil, $42, for work on roads; John Neil, $10, for do.; Joseph Doharty, $65, for do.; John Blain, $38, for do.; Chas. Howard, $3, for do; J. Lawrence, $19.30, taxes charged in error; S. Braidner, 50 cts, for plank for road; John Clugston, $4, for gravel for road; Andrew Grier, $99, said amount being ordered by Wm. Kerr, contractor, for building approaches to new bridges; Robert Garbut, $5, for road work; Robert Hetherington, $25, part payment for repairing hall; George Graham, $9, for lumber for bridges; D. McArthur, 50 cents, for repairing road scraper; J. B. Fawcett, 50 cents, for repairing road scraper; Wm. Eaton, $5, for plough broken on roads, being certified to by Mr. Gardner, pathmaster; J. Plewis, $52.42, being an equivalent to gratis labor on 4th line near Kimberly.

On motion being made and seconded, the Council adjourned until the last Saturday in August next.

ROBERT DUNLOP, Tp. Clerk.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Apparently there is no depth of meanness too low for some creatures to reach, or no height of idiotic folly to which they cannot soar. Of the truth of this we have had abundant evidence in our village during the past week, and that in quarters where better things were looked for. It is no secret that certain foolish parents were very angry because their children did not succeed as well as some others at the late examination at Owen Sound.

I understand some of these bumpkins have gone so far as to charge our worthy teacher with corrupting the Board of Examiners by purchasing examination papers beforehand and assisting some of his pupils to work them the night before they wrote. Now, Mr. Editor, this is a serious matter. Put into plain English it stands thus: Our teacher has been charged with having, for a consideration, induced the Board of Examiners, at the head of which stands the Rev. Canon Mulholland, to do an act compared with which horse-stealing or highway robbery would be but trivial offences.

Your readers will naturally ask: "Why all this fuss, and splutter and ebullition of childish wrath?" Let us try and explain. Mean-souled people are always envious and jealous, they cannot endure to see their neighbor prosper equally with themselves. This meanness of soul is a sure indication of mental weakness and incapacity. Weak-minded persons are, as a rule, vain and full of self-conceit, heartless and disingenuous—wholly incapable of performing a generous, large-hearted and disinterested act. This class of persons, though they may possess a certain amount of "smartness," which they themselves are apt to mistake for cleverality, yet, in intellectual capacity, they are always weaklings—utterly incapable of grasping a subject which rises somewhat above their own mediocre natures.

These people, in their self-conceit and ignorance, never think to blame themselves for any failure which they or theirs may suffer. Under these circumstances a little friendly counsel and enlightenment may serve a good purpose.

Sir, there is no fact in the natural world more clearly demonstrated than the hereditary transmission of quality—"like begets like" is an adage as old as the hills, and scientific investigation has in these later ages clearly demonstrated its truth. Physiology and psycology conjointly with comprehensive investigation have established beyond doubt that if a certain trait of character, either mental, moral or physical, be largely developed in the parent, the same trait of character will generally be found in the child. In conformity with this universal law, can we reasonably expect that the children of these mean-souled, weak-minded people should be crowned with the same degree of success which might naturally and reasonably be looked for in others?

After all, Mr. Editor, there must be some truth in the "Darwinian" theory, viz: That man is but an emanation of the monkey.

Some people, even at this late age of the world's history, exhibit traits of character wonderfully illustrative of the unmistakable traces of the Baboon element which still pervades their natures. The prevalence of this Monkey element in human nature manifests itself in pride, vain glory, self-conceit, jealousy, envy, selfishness and all the baser passions which deform and disfigure our frail humanity.

Trusting that those for whose benefit these lines are penned will receive them in the true spirit of meekness and contrition befitting the occasion whereby permanent benefit may accrue to themselves, I beg to take my leave for the present.

ZOONOMY.

MARKDALE, Aug. 30, 1881.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Ward, I say Yes! Presbyterians claim that their church, as regards its government, is truly Apostolic; not because the early christians were called by that name, but because that in its form of government and polity in the nature, number and quality of her officers, as in the ordinary administration of her affairs as a church, she conforms more closely to the Apostolic than any other branch of the Christian Church known to the present or any preceding age since about the close of the second century.

The word Presbyterian is to be understood as expressive, not so much of a particular creed or articles of faith, but of that peculiar form of republican government which obtains in that church—in this sense only shall we discuss the question at the present.

We hold that "whatsoever is not clearly taught or fairly deducible from the word of God" is not to be received as an article of faith or followed in practice. We find but two orders of church officers in the Apostolic Church viz: Bishop or Elder, called also Presbyter or Pastor and Deacon. See Acts xi, 30; xiv, 23; xx, 17. Titus i, 5. James v, 14; &c., &c.

The elders of Ephesus were overseers or bishops, as the word indicates, by appointment of the Holy Ghost; the elders of Crete were to possess all the qualifications required in bishops, and Paul commands the elders to act as bishops by "feeding the flock, &c." Acts xx, 28; Titus i, 5-9; 1 Timothy iii, 1-7; 1 Peter v, 1-4. There was a plurality of elders in every congregation or company of believers. It was so in Jerusalem, Ephesus, Philippi, in the churches of Asia Minor, and Crete, Acts xv, 2; xiv, 23; xx, 17. See also 1 Tim., 3rd chap. throughout where but two classes of rulers are mentioned in the church.

The Priest has no place in the Christian church, seeing he has no sacrifice to offer, for "Christ our great High priest" offered the sacrifice of himself "once for all," Heb. 10th chap., &c.

For the origin of the office of Deacon see Acts 6th chap. Besides these two classes of officers, viz: Bishop, Elder, Presbyter, or Pastor, for all these different are applied to one and the same officer, and Deacon, we can find no other in the New Testament Church. It rests therefore with those who hold to Episcopacy to point out upon what portions of scripture they base their tripartite form of church government. Will Mr. Ward therefore have the goodness to tell us where he finds Bishops, Priests and Deacons associated in the government of the Apostolic Church?

Mr. W. asks how we account for the silence of history in reference to the change from Presbytery to Episcopacy? Well, to begin, we do not regard the argument as of the slightest importance, it is one that has done duty for the thousandth time, it figured largely in the Globe last winter, it was one of Mr. Langtry's special pillars. What does it amount to? Will it bear the scrutiny of intelligent criticism? Stripped of all superfluous verbiage, the question stands thus: Do we find Episcopacy in the Apostolic Church? We are constrained to answer "No!" Do we find Episcopacy in the present day? We reply "Yes, rampant, in the Roman, the Greek, and the Anglican churches. It therefore must have arisen at some intermediate period between the present and the New Testament ages whether historians noted the fact or not. To argue from the silence of history that the change never occurred would be simply preposterous. We regard Mr. Ward's sweeping assertion "Every person who knows anything of Church history, knows that the Presbyterian form of church government was unknown to the world until the sixteenth century," as of a piece with the rest; respect for the gentleman and for the position he occupies restrains me from characterizing this assertion as it merits.

Permit me to say, for the information of that gentleman, that there are many people who know something of church history and other history who differ from him as wide as the poles on that question.

Perhaps the most laughable part of Mr. Ward's article is to be found in the closing sentence—we note "the Catholic and Apostolic Church of England" of which King Harry, the wife-killer, was the first Pope.

Now, as everybody knows, the word "Catholic" means universal. By what stretch of imagination can the Rev. gentleman apply the term to one of the smallest Protestant denominations in the world? If his church's claim to Apostolicity has no better foundation than the claim to Catholicity, he may just as well give up, he is simply beating the air.

MARKDALE, Aug. 23, 1881.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—The success which the pupils of the Markdale School achieved at the late examination deserves more than a passing notice. As reported by the Advertiser we find that of one hundred and forty odd pupils who wrote at Owen Sound but twenty-three were successful, of whom four or over one-sixth, were from Markdale and of the fourteen, two, or one-seventh were from our school.

The significance of this success will be more apparent from the following comparisons. The County of Grey contains three considerable towns, Owen Sound, Durham, Meaford, and six rising ambitious villages—Markdale, Chatsworth, Thornbury, Clarksburg, Flesherton, Dundalk, Priceville—yet from the whole County but twenty-three pupils were successful, of whom four were from Markdale. Of the other nineteen successful candidates, I understand fourteen were from the Owen Sound High School, this would leave but five to be distributed among the other towns, villages and rural districts.

This showing is certainly very creditable, and reflects the highest praise upon all concerned and cannot but be accepted as an ample vindication of the enlighted policy pursued by the Trustees in securing the services of a thoroughly competent and trained teacher for the head Mastership.

The rising generation at least owe a deep debt of gratitude to those who promoted and successfully carried out the union of the Schools, through which alone results so pronounced could possibly have been attained.

From the above it is clear that Markdale School has become par-excellence the training School of the County—a feat which young people through the surrounding townships preparing for the teaching profession would do well to bear in mind.

SIR, It is gratifying to know that the efforts of the teachers are appreciated both by parents and pupils, for never before in the history of the School was such a successful examination as that held immediately before the late vacation.

The lively interest of the parents was apparent from the number who attended and the general expression of satisfaction which sat on every countenance, together with the words of encouragement, sympathy spoken by many, bore ample testimony to their approval and the goodwill and cordiality existing between teacher and pupils were apparent to the most casual observer.

Perhaps the most pleasing feature of the evening's proceedings was the presentation of a valuable gold chain an and address to the master by the graduating class as an expression of their esteem and regard and slight recognitions of his service in their behalf. I must not fail to mention the strawberry festival provided by the young lady pupils—in fact a sumptious entertainment to which both pupils and visitors did ample justice. Short speeches by some of the clergy of the village and others followed, after which proceedings closed about seven o'clock p. m. This terminated the spring session of the Markdale Public School for 1881.

SIR,—I was mair than astonished to see a correspondent o' yours that ca's himsel' "M" stickin' up for singin' minor tunes in Kirks, an' sayin' that minor tunes stir the saul sae muckle better than major tunes Noo, I'm sure that ony body that hears singing in oor Kirks, canna but allow that minor tunes only are sung, an' as for them stiring the saul, they wadna stir a moose. "M" maun surely be few when he speaks o' sic a thing, or else he doesna onderstan' English. Ony man wha kens onything aboot singing, wad say that it's major tunes we need sang in oor Kirks—strong, michty, powerfu' leadin, an' no dronin' awa at humdrum minor tunes. The great want is precentors, wha can sing we vir, an' pit some life in't. Failin' that, the neist best thing's an organ that will toot loud eneuch an' keep time to a T, sae that a body can join in wi't. There's nae use in miscaing organs, If we can mak organs to dae the wark better than the organs made by by the Almichty, I dinna see for why we shouldna use them. We are tauld in the guid Book to "mak a loud noise joyfully," an' if major tunes an' organs will help us tae dae that, then doon wi' the minor tunes "M" surely canna hae muckle rumgumption aboot music, or he wadna hae spoken see about major andminor tunes; but in charity I wad say that he made a mistake, an' pit major for minor, an' veesy versy.

FROM THE OULD SOD.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—My last left me in Ould Ireland, where I still am travelling round sight seeing and gaining health; but before commencing to talk this country, let me say a few words about Paris and some other places I have visited. From London to Paris is 240 miles, via Newhaven and Dippe, and usually occupies twelve hours.

In journeying from London to Newhaven, you travel through one of the finest agricultural sections of England The farms are large, fields well cultivated, and beautifully enclosed with hawthorn hedges, kept in excellent trim. Wheat, oats, barley, and garden stuff are chiefly cultivated, and everything looked flourishing. The farmers throughout England are in excellent spirits about the crops, as they are much superior to what they have been accustomed to for the past three years.

From Newhaven, a small watering place on the south cost of England, I took passage in a neat, trim little boat, which takes you across the English Channel, some 60 miles, to Dippe in France, and it was just here that my troubles began, as my knowledge of French is very imperfect, my education having been neglected in my youth. I could only make the natives understand what I wanted by going through a pantomine, and gesticulating like a circus clown. Dippe has a population of 22,000, chiefly engaged in oyster fishing, ivory carving, drinking wine, and fleecing those who are unfortunate enough not to understand French. It contains more ugly and deformed women to the square foot than any place I have touched yet.—For head-gear, they wear great high peaked caps similar to those seen in the pictures of our great-great grandmothers, heavy wooden shoes, no stockings, a handkerchief, that was once white, pinned across their shoulders, and a petti-coat that reaches to about their knees, made of coarse yellow and green striped stuff, which completes their outfit. Their faces resemble their petti-coats, being a mixture of green and yellow. From Dippe to Paris only occupies a run of a few hours on very well appointed cars, but at a much slower speed than in England. On our way we pass through Normandy, similar in many respects to Ireland, but unlike Ireland the people are contented, and apparently happy on two meals a day, and those not of the best. I don't think our Canadians would care to live on two meals daily and not grumble.... Their farm houses are not scattered over the country such as ours are, but are huddled together generally in one long street, in many cases some two or four miles from their farms. The houses are low, thatched, one story, whitewashed buildings, and as near alike as two peas. As in England, wheat, rye, oats, and along the slopes of the hills vineyards are cultivated. Crops are good and are mostly housed, or, rather, stacked, as they have no barns, or at least not what we in Canada would call a barn, to put their grain into.

Of Paris, the metropolis of France, it is difficult to give a description at all satisfactory in the short compass of a letter. In point of actual size and population it is far inferior to London, and in point of wealth and business transactions London is far ahead; but as regards the enjoyments and gaieties of life, the Parisians must certainly carry off the palm. The inhabitants pride themselves upon being accounted the most fashionable, gay and polished people in the world, and nothing pleases a Frenchman more than to hear you praise their city, It contains a population of 2,000,000, and has a circumference of nearly 22 miles, and no city in the world has such splendid wide and clean streets and boulevards, which run through it from one end to the other. On each side of the boulevards trees are planted, principally elm, which are trimmed up in such a manner as to form an arch over head for miles, and nothing can be more delightful on a hot summer's day than a drive through and along the boulevards. They are wide, and at intervals adorned with monuments of noted men, obleiks, &c.—They are always gay and brilliant, and crowded with fashionable well dressed people. The cafes, or eating and drinking stands, are great institutions, peculiar to Paris, having existed for over a century and half. They are to be found in every Quarter of the city, and generally decorated with much taste and splendor. When lighted up at night it is difficult to describe anything so perfectly enchanting. Here it is the Frenchmen and women are seen in all their glory, seated near a small table in front of the cafe out on the side-walk, enjoying their dinner, their lunch or their wine. Nothing can be more jolly or delightful looking. Every seat generally occupied, both inside and outside, by men, women and children, all either eating, drinking, smoking or talking. The blaze of thousands of fancy colored gas lights, the reflection of mirrors, the clinking of glasses, the rattle of knives and forks, and the chattering of the charming ladies, and the merry laugh of innocent children, is very pleasing and enchanting. All Parisians drink wine, from the toddling child to the grey haired old man, and drink it in abundance, and singular to say during my stay in Paris I never saw a drunken man or woman, excepting on the night of the great National Fete they hold on the 14th July to celebrate the birth of the new Republic, and then only a few young who had imbibed rather freely of the free wine which the government distributed all over Paris in thousands of gallons. On that night I attended the grand review of some 100,000 men of the French army held at Longchams. The day was excessively hot and some 50 of the soldiers had to be carried off the field from the effects of sun stroke. The French soldiers did not impress me very favorably. They were dressed very slovenly—wide red trousers, blue jacket and a great big cap, a cross between a grenideer's and a cavalryman's cap. In size and soldier appearance they are much inferior to the British soldier. In speaking about the size to a Frenchman, he said all their largest and best men were killed during the Franco-German war, significantly added they would yet have their revenge, and march through Berlin as the Germans did through Paris. I think they will have to wait a long time before that takes place. The sights of Paris are many and grand. I shall only mention a few. First, the theatres are legion, and upon them millions are lavished. They are open every day, Sunday and Saturday, indeed Paris knows no Sabbath,—shops, theatres, concerts, saloons, cafes and all the rest, are in full blast on that day, and if possible gayer than on week days. The Tulleires, the former residence of Napoleon, is in ruins, and stands facing the Cham de Ellise, a monument to the Communists who destroyed it after the fall of Sedan. Further along to the right Place Vendome, a beautiful Corinthian pillar 220 feet high, made out of the cannons captured by Napoleon I, during his wars with Russia and Austria in 1805. It is ornamented with representations of the battles he fought and won (Waterloo is not there.) To the northeast lies the magnificent church of the Madeline, richly decorated with scripture scenes. It is 328 feet long, and 188 feet broad, and cost $2,500,000 to build. We next come to the Louvre, the most beautifully decorated building in Paris. It was here that Henry III, Henry IV, Louis XIII, Louis XIV, Charles IX, and other French monarchs lived, and from here walked to the scaffold many a head that wore a crown. It was on this spot that the massacre of St. Barthelemy took place, when 100,000 souls were sent unprepared to meet their Maker. Lastly, Versailles, the most visited, and decidedly the most favorite resort near Paris. It was here that Louis IV resided, surrounded by all that money could purchase, and detested by his people. His palaces and grounds were the most magnificent in the world, and simply defy description; suffice it to say, that the palace and grounds cost the enarmous sum of two hundred million dollars, and yet all this did not make him happy, as he died a miserable death.

Many other places of equal note was visited, such as the tomb of Napoleon I, on the banks of the Sein, where he wished his body to be buried as he said, in the midst of his beloved people whom he loved so well.

Art is particularly well represented in Paris in all its various branches—statuary, oil painting, painted glass drawing, engraving, water color drawing, &c.

The Botanic Garden is admirably arranged, and contains some 18,000 different species: Mr. Bowes would no doubt linger there for hours.

The Managerie, though containing many more specimens, is much inferior to the one in London, as are also the geological specimens.

Fearing I have wearied the patience of your readers, I must halt. I had intended giving you a short sketch of my trip through Scotland and Ireland, but will have to defer it to my next.

W. J. MCFARLAND.

Harvest is about over, and has been at least one of the finest we ever had, the weather has been dry and exceedingly warm, consequently the crops have been housed earlier than usual. The late spring wheat is rusted considerable, but with that exception the yield will be above an average. Markets are on the rise and will likely rule high through the season. Accident.—A son of Mr. Wm. Dr. Sproule was called in who succeeded in stopping the bleeding by compression, as it was impossible to pick up the artery from the nature of the wound. This should be a warning to people to be a little more careful as to where they throw their broken glass. The little fellow is doing pretty well, but will have to be kept very quiet for three or four weeks.

A CHICAGO GIRL AT CONCORD.

A young lady on the West Side has just returned from Boston. While there her uncle, who is a reporter on a sporting paper, took her to the Summer School of Philosophy at Concord. She heard some one read an essay on the Absoluteness of Absolution, and became infatuated with the doctrine taught.

"Chawles," said she to her lover the other evening (he is a clerk in a harness store). "Chawles, do you realize that you cannot differentia the indissoluble absoluteness of the absolute?"

"No," he replied, "to tell you the truth, I don't," and as it was the first time he had seen her since she got back, the suggestion uttered struck him with some alarm.

"Did you ever stop to inquire," she began again, "into the inchoation or the rudimentary incipients of the rhapsodical coagmentations of your thoughts of love?"

"Well, not to speak of," he said.

"Then, if there is one drop of blood in your heart that pulsates for me; if there is one concest, nooscopic or psycological, that in the incogitancy of your dreams or in the perquisition of your walking hours, absorbs a thought of me, I beg that you would eliminate any abstruse or equivocal particles of distrust from the profound and all transpicious abnormality of your love."

"Great heavens, Maria, have you swallowed a dictionary?"

"No I have not," she said, with a look of stern and forbidding displeasure; "I have been to the school of philosophy at Concord." Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Honored and Blest.—When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that by combining some well known valuable remedies, the most wonderful medicine was produced, which would cure such a wide range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many were skeptical; but proof of its merits by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the discoverers of that great medicine, Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors.—Democrat.

BRIC-A-BRIC.

A HUSBAND WHO LAUGHED

Several men were making purchases in a Michigan avenue store yesterday, when a man who had been looking out of the window for some time turned and said:

"Well, that's a bad case."

"What is it?" enquired two or three at once.

"Well, I don't know who is the husband of this woman out here in the wagon, but if I were he I'd go across the street and smash that fellow's head."

"Why?"

"Why, because he has been working like a beaver for this last half hour to get up a flirtation with her."

At this one of the men began to chuckle. Then the chuckle ran into a laugh, and finally he had to sit down.

"What's the matter with you?" some one asked.

"Why, I'm—I'm that womans husband."

"Are you? And you are laughing over the flirtation!"

"I—I can't help it," he said as he went off into another fit. "Just think of him a flirting and a strutting up and down and a doing the purty when the old woman out there has been stone blind for seven years—ha! ha! ha!"—M. Quad.

A Fool once More.—For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbug stuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her, she is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it cost me only two dollars such folly pays."—H. W., Detroit, Mich.—Free Press.

Beware.—The Yankee patent right men are on the war path, the farmers should beware. Their modus operandi in this case are as follows: A man representing himself as general agent for Ayer's sharpeners, with headquarters at Toronto, calls and desires his intended victim to become an agent for a township, and on inducing him to become so produces a memorandum of an order of a quarter of a gross of the sharpeners with an agreement that as he sells them he is to remit one half the proceeds to the company at Toronto and keep the other half. A few days after another man calls representing himself attorney for the company, and producing a bill of shipment demands immediate payment for the goods or a note for the same which, if not complied with, endeavors to frighten his victim into payment by threats of legal proceedings. Several in the neighborhood of Fulton, Lincoln county, have been victimized to the extent of $198.—Spectator.

And now an old Italian prophecy has been raked up and this little globe is to be relieved from further duty on the 15th of November next. The prophecy was uttered in the fourteenth century by Leonardo Aretino, who, it is claimed was the "boss" prophet of the country at the time. The course of destruction will last for fifteen days; on the first day the sea will overflow its boundaries, and on the second will penetrate even to the center of the earth. On the third day all river creatures and on the fourth all sea creatures will perish. On the fifth the birds will die, on the sixth the houses will fall in, on the seventh the rocks will be cleft, on the eighth there will be a great earthquake, on the ninth all the mountains will fall in, on the tenth all men will become dumb, on the eleventh the graves will be opened, it will rain stars, on the thirteenth all men will die, on the fourteenth Heaven and earth will be burned, and finally will follow resurrection and the day of judgment.

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. Ayer's Pills are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

Ayer's Pills are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these Pills are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

THE TEN Insurance Commandments.

1. Thou shalt insure thy real and personal estate and al that thou hast against fire, for—

Defending thyself from misfortune until old age,
Thy happiness shall equal thy wisdom.

2. Thou shalt not insure more than thou dost possess, for insurance is a business wherein thou canst not make money. This is simply thy duty in order to preserve what thou hast acquired.

Preserve that which thou shalt acquire,
Whoso is prudent guardeth his goods.

3. Thou shalt not insure less than thou dost possess—for what thou dost not insure, will not be paid in case of loss.

Though poverty is not a vice
To lose all is not a pleasure.

4. Thou shalt not make excessive declarations of value respecting thy property in case of fire; but thou shall state truly that which belongs to thee, that thou mayest not have a lawsuit or gain a bad reputation

As we make our bed so must we lie.

5. Thou shalt also exhort thy neighbors, thy friends, and thy relations to insure themselves, that they may escape loss, and that poverty through a loss by fire be not laid to thy charge.

That which comes by the flute goes by the drum.

6. Thou shalt not backslide, nor hinder thy neighbor from making all these insurances, for those who are so improvident as not to insure are those who are most visited with losses; no one pities their condition.

Those that are beaten pay the fine.

7. Thou shalt not search for evasion to get rid of the expense of insurance, for it is low in proportion to thy position; thou canst put by as much as the value of the bottles of wine thou drinkest, and thou wilt then have sufficient for all thy insurance.

The pitcher that goes often to the well must in the end be filled.

8. Thou shalt regard the expense of insurance like the expense of thy meat and drink; and as thou canst not do without these, because thou hast hunger and thirst thou shalt not more hesitate about insurance, because it will give thee security, repose, consolation, and aid.

In thirst and misfortune
A pear in reserve is a pleasure.

9. Thou shall be careful when thou insurest that thou selectest a reliable and safe company and that the agent is an honest one, because in so doing in case of a loss thy money shall not have been paid for nought, and if thou lose thy property and not get thy insurance thou will be poorer than a church rat.

If thou fallest into poverty
People will care but little for thee.

10. Thou shalt do all thy insurance with Robert Davis, the Conveyancer and Land and Insurance Agent at Flesherton, for—

He represents only the best companies, and
He guards well his patrons' interests.

ROBT. DAVIS,

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Real Estate, Loan, and Estate Agent. Flesherton Branch office, Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, every Thursday.

WHAT AN OLD FARMER SAYS.

This is the advice of an old man who has tilled the soil for forty years:—

I am an old man, upwards of three score years, during two score of which I have been rich and all I need; do not owe a dollar; have given my children a good education, and when I am called away shall leave enough to keep the wolf from the door. My experience is that:—

1. One acre of land, well tilled and well prepared, produced more than two which received only the same amount of labor used on one.

2. One cow, horse, mule, sheep or hog well fed is more profitable than two which recieved only the same amount necessary to keep one well.

3. One acre of clovergrass is worth more than two of cotton where no grass or clover is raised.

4. No farmer who buys oats, corn or wheat, fodder and hay, can keep the sheriff from the door to the end.

5. The farmer who never reads the papers, and sneers at book farming and improvements, always has a leaky roof, poor stock, broken down fences, and always complainins of 'bad seasons.'

6. The farmer who is above his business and entrusts it to another to mange, soon has no business to attend to.

7. The farmer whose habitual beverage is cool water is healthier, wealthier and wiser than he who does not refuse to drink.

HUMOROUS.

After throwing eight boys over the fence from a water-melon patch, the woman charged thus:—Now, see 'ere boys, you'll keep this thing up till you get me riled.

A medical journal at Munich says that diphtheria caught by kissing is likely to asanme much severer form than if the disease were contracted or imparted in some other way. This should be a warning to married men and hired girls.

"My brethren," said a western minister, "the preaching of the gospel to some people is like pouring water over a sponge—it soaks in and stays. To others it is like the wind blowing through the chicken coop. My experience of this congregation is that it contains more chicken coops than sponges."

A preacher, who was annoyed by the ladies of his congregation turning about in their seats, paused in his discourse to say; "Ladies, if you will give me your attention for a few moments, I will keep a good look out on the door, and if anything worse than a man enters, I will warn you in time for you to make your escape."

THE LIME KILN CLUB.

"I wouldn't gin a cent fur de man who quotes old proverbs an' adopts second han' mottoes," began the old man as the crunching of harvest apples suddenly ceased. "Dis am an aige fur ebery man to hold his own plow, an' who am content to let some one else hold it must be satisfied wid cobs in place of co'n. Ef I was so poo' an' low down dat I had to pick rags I would have my own maxims an' mottoes. Instead of sayin' Doan' put off till to-morrow what can be dun to-day, I wou'd have it; 'now ole man, you git right up an' dust and sling mo' rags dis week dan any odder chap kin in a month.' 'De oder day I met Comeback Jones. You know he am 'bout sixty y'ars old, an' 'bout as hard up as a woodchuck in a b'ar's grip. I axed de ole man how he was keepin' up wid de purcesshun, an he replied: 'Wall ize mighty hard up, but dey say it am a long lane dat has no turn. Just fink of an ole man wid one No. 18 in de grave waitin' fur a turn in de lane to bring him heaps to eat an' lots to w'ar? All frew life he has carried dat second han' sayin' wid him, an' am yet a believer in it. Why didn't he have one of his own? If he had said, 40 years ago: 'Doan' foller any lane, but cut cross lots,' de wolf wouldn,t be arter him today. A man who has de will to make a motto has de pluck to make it a success. 'Buckle down to bizness' am a better motto dan any book kin give ye. Let me, in' closin', quote some of de mottoes an' maxims belongin' to members of dis club:

"Sir Isaac Walpole—'Doan drap fifty cents in reachin' fur a dollar.'

"Waydown Bebee—'When ye can't dig frew a wall climb ober it.'

"Giveadam Jones—'Git dar' if it takes a leg.'

"Pickles Smith—'Ye can't swim a ribber by sittin' on a bank.'

"Samuel Shin—'Sot yer alarm clock fur 6 in de mornin.'

"Trustee Pulback—'If de road am up hill stiffen yer back bone a little mo."

"Kyan Johnson—'De man who w'ars his hat on his ear shows de empty side of his head.'

"Brutus Jackson—'Hoe co'n wid yer hans an' arms 'stead of yer mouf.'

"Elder Toots—'Take a job at fust sight, but doan' trade hosses till ye think it ober."

HE DID.

The following open letter was then read:

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Aug. 3, 1881.

Bro. Gardner,—Did you, some seven or eight weeks since, advocate the establishment of the whipping post for petty offences? Please give me a direct answer, in order to decide a wager. Very truly,

SOLOMON WHITE.

"I did," said the old man, as he arose, "an' I do now, an' I shell in de fucher, onless de need of it passes away. In de fust place, does it degrade a man any mo' to warm him up wid a rawhide dan it does to put him in jail or sot him to poundin' stone on de street? In de nex' place, kin a mean man be degraded? In de las' place, we am all awar' dat not one petty offence in five am punished, bekase de law doan' tech it, or bekase it's too much trouble an' expense to prosecute. Sartin pussons make a biz ness of loafin. How many of 'em kin you convict of vagrancy? Sartin pussons insult lone women on de street. How many of 'em have eber been jailed? Dar am a dozen udder offences dat de law doan' tackle, or if it does de 'fenders git 'cla'r. What punishment am it to a loafer to go to jail for a month. He gits plenty to eat, an' a good bed to sleep on, an' gains five pounds of let. If dat same man was tied up an' thirty lashes laid on his ba'r back he'd open his eyes pow'ful wide. Go on de riber, go on de dyars, walk on de street, an' you find de loafer. He pushes an' crowds an' abuses an' insults. What kin you do wid him? Make complaint an' de law will play wid him an' let him go. Let an officer give him a soun' floggin' an' his hat would come down off his ear in no time. De wippin' post may be barbarous, but what do you call it when a loafer follows your wife fru de streets? It may be degradin', but what do you call it when three drunken loafers take possesshun of a 'scurshun boat an' knock men down an' frighten women half to death. Take a tramp, a loafer, a drunkard or a petty thief, tie him to a wippin' post an' play a rawhide on his back for five minutes an' you have done mo' to make dat man respect de power of law an' de rights of odder men dan any workhouse sentence could do."

CURIOUS FACTS.

It is said that cats with blue eyes are always deaf.

Statistics go to show that suicides are more frequent in hot weather than during a lower temperature.

According to Arristotle large ears are an indication of imbicility, while small ones announce madness.

Among the Indians near the Amazon there are no words for numbers, and a similar want of arithmetical power.

It was once believed that the house leek, if grown upon the roof, would protect the house from being struck by lightning.

The guanaco of Patagonia, is described as having the head of a camel, the body of a deer, wool of the sheep, and neigh of a horse.

The Ashantee of Africa, like the ancient Greeks, when he drinks, spills a little of the liquor on the ground as an offering to the gods.

The bombadier beetle when touched produces a noise resembling the discharge of a minature musket, while a blue smoke issues from its body.

The Barbab tree of South Africa may be barked or burned without injury to the tree, and it continues to live and grow for some time after it is cut down.

Chinese mandarins or governors often sentence offenders to lie on the ground and receive thirty strokes of the bamboo, while for great crimes men are strangled or beheaded.

Some animals have regular cemeteries to which they retire to die. The llama of Soute America has its district cemeteries, in which bones are found bleeching in great numbers.

During a heavy shower at Milbrook, Ont., countless myriads of small black toads fell with the rain. Shortly after the rain, next day, in some places, it was almost impossible to step on the sidewalks without crushing some of these little hoppers.

Those persons who are found of tracing great events to small causes may find a strong instance in the death of the late ex Prince Imperial of France. He was very agile, and would unquestionable have vaulted into his saddle, with an excellent chance of escaping from the Zulus, but the leather of the saddle flap (probably supplied by a fraudulent contractor, whose nefariousness was overlooked by a careless store inspector) tore in his hand, and a piece of rotton leather perhaps changed the late of empires.

GREAT ANNUAL

CLEARIG SALE,

AT THE

POST OFFICE STORE,

FLESHERTON.

In order to make room for heavy Spring Importations now arriving daily, I have decided reducing my present large and well selected and assorted stock of

GENAERAL DRY GOODS, FURS, MILLIERY,

Ready-Made Clothing,

BOOTS AND SHOES,

Hats, Caps and Groceries

TO THE LOWEST POINT POSSIBLE,

and in order to do so,

Will Sell at and Under COST,

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

The stock is all new, well bought, and well worth the attention of the closet buyers. In GROCERIES you will find evrything of First-Class Value.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupolous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.

You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

The Lowest Possible Prices!

For CASH and FARM PRODUCE

BUT NOT FOR CREDIT.

I have also in stock and for sale, a large quantity of

PURE SEED GRAIN!

Such as White Russian, Glasgow, Red Chaff, and other varieties of Spring wheat. Also Pure Clean Peas, Oats and Barley. Prime Timothy and Clover Seed; also Fresh Garden Seeds, and [illegible] each and every Farmer to sow clean seed, you will make money by paying a few cents extra, and purchasing a good article.

I am now selling large quanties of

COARSE LAND SALT,

FOR MANURE,

Which will pay every Farmer Five Dollars for every one invested in it, and as I am anxious that every Farmer in this locality and neighboring Townships shall try it, have decided in selling in five and [illegible] barrel lots at the Lowest Cash Price laid down by the car direct from the Manufacturers, and bought for nett cash at Bottom Prices.

I would also intimate that my

SPRING IMPORTATIONS

ARE ARRIVING DAILY,

And I will have opened out and show

VIOLA'S REVENGE.

By the Author of "My Lady's Secret," "A Waif's Fortunes," "The Lady of Gorson Lea," &c.

Nay, this should be her revenge—to accept his homage, giving him nothing in return; to permit him a lover's torment, but not a lover's privileges; to treat him with cold and studied indifference until vows had joined them indissolubly together; and then to reveal to him and to his world the successful imposture and taunt him with his shame.

Revolving her new design, she let her fingers stray into improvisation. Watching her wan, cold face, watching for the clue he needed, he sat and listened.

It seemed to him that in the rippling notes there were the song of birds, the dash of merry waves, the gladness of the sunshine, the laughter of little children. Then the gladness grew and grew until it was almost pain. There was a thrilling intensity in those broken chords, those little irregular pauses, those restless harmonies that changed ever before their full fruition. It seemed to him that her music was like the rapture of a human soul, imperfect as yet, but developing ever towards perfection. At length the rapture was broken by a crash of discord.

Then there was a storm for a while, storm and struggle and wild fierce agony, until the storm died away to sheer exhaustion, and nothing was left of it but long low moanings.

They hurt him—those long low moanings, and once he thought of puting a sprightly fantasia before her and bidding her play it; but he changed his mind and waited, watching for the clue.

What did it mean, this march of the notes, gathering strength and swelling louder, clearer, to a burst of exultation? She stopped abruptly and her slender hands lay idle upon the keys.

"What have you been playing?" he asked.

"I have been playing my thoughts," answered Viola, with frigid composure.

CHAPTER XII.

In the Wye Valley the trees began to don their autumn livery. The weeks crept slowly by, but still Colonel Pettitt stayed on at Burgot Grange, like an "Old Man of the Sea" astride William Burgot's shoulders, declining to be removed.

The incubus grew almost unbearable, yet the unwilling host made no effort to dislodge his guest.

In occasional looks and tones, in allusions, pregnant with veiled sarcasm, to their ancient intimacy in India, William Burgot detected dormant suspicion; and he feared to arouse a monster which might turn and rend him.

As to the Colone he was perfectly content. The wines, the viands, the amusements, the society, were quite to his taste, and particularly the society. This middle-aged Mars had found in Clara Dallas a Venus to his liking, and he was madly in love with her.

Clara smiled sweetly upon her adorer and accepted his homage—when William Burgot was not present—most graciously. She was glad to have this second string to her bow, to be fitted and used, perhaps, if the first should snap. Failing William Burgot and his fifteen thousand a year, she might be glad to fall back on Colonel Pettitt and his half-pay, particularly if his half-pay were supplemented by a good private fortune. She prepared many dainty lures to entrap the Colonel into communicativeness upon the latter point, but without result.

He saw the lures, he was conscious of the mercenary nature of his goddess; he knew that, however sweet her smiles, however gracious her manner, she would not permit a definite declaration of his affection unless he could surround himself, like Jupiter, with a shower of gold. A charmed circle was drawn about her, over which no one might pass but he who was treasure-laden. He felt that if he should be rash enough to break through, it would be the prelude to a summary dismissal.

For the Colonel was poor, very poor, for a man in his position; and likely to remain so, unless in following up certain vague suspicions he might chance to find a royal road to fortune.

He was not jealous of William Burgot; for the Squire's manner towards Clara was not one to inspire mistrust or to afford Mrs. Robert occasion to felicitate herself on the result of skillful diplomacy. He let the girl make court to him, in her playful kittenish way, whilst the Colonel smiled benignantly, as upon an affection of filial regard. But, remembering Mrs. Robert's overtures, and noting the continual endorsement of them visible in Clara's little attentions, William Burgot felt too disgusted to respond. It would be time enough, he reasoned, to pluck this over-ripe plum when the chance of starving became more imminent.

"What are your plans for the morning, Burgot?" asked the Colonel one day at breakfast.

"I think we might try the covers adjoining Armidale's land—in fact, I arranged last night that we should meet him at ten sharp."

"How delightful!" cried Mrs. Robert. "It is quite warm to-day out of doors. We can bring luncheon, and help you to demolish it. I do so enjoy those feasts in the open air!"

So it came to pass that at a given time there was a reunion beneath a noble old tree, hard by a belt of gorse. It was a picturesque scene—the glorious autumnal tints of the foliage, the heap of slaughtered game, the warm furs and gay ribbons of the ladies, the diversity of male attire—the gaiters and shooting-boots of the gentlemen, the velveteen of the keepers, the liveries of the servants.

All went merry as a marriage bell, until William Burgot, stepping back carelessly, caught his heel against a protruding root, and came crashing down amongst the underwood, with a groan of pain.

"Are you hurt?" was the simultaneous ejaculation.

"There is something wrong with my arm," he answered, as half a dozen willing hands helped him to rise. "An awkward twist, I fancy, to say nothing of about forty thorns."

"Oh, let me help you to draw off your coat," cried "Dear Clara."

Very gently she performed the suggested survise, and rolled back the white sleeve of his shirt to ascertain what mischief was done. A few pricks and scratches where the thorns had entered, a slight discoloration, was the extent of it. But all the lookers-on remarked a healed wound, scars which told how horribly the flesh must once have been ploughed up and torn. Colonel Pettitt regarded the scars with strained earnestness. When he spoke his voice was less loud than usual, and an odd quiver of excitement ran through it.

"Only a wild cat could have given you those beauty-marks," he observed. "Once I saw a poor fellow's arm ripped open in a similar way. Do you remember the tiger-hunt of Jungapore Burgot?"

Did he remember? William Burgot's face turned ghastly pale. For one instant he met the speaker's glance, then his eyes sought the ground.

"How ill you look!" cried Mrs. Robert. "Dear Clara, give the poor fellow some brandy in a tumbler!"

"I fear its a nasty sprain—the pain is intense," replied William Burgot, huskily. "You must all excuse me. I shall go home."

He did not wait for condolences or for remonstrances, but strode away. Clara hurried after him, with expressions of solicitude. Colonel Pettitt watched her with eyes that were full of triumphant amusement.

He drank much champagne and made jests as they ate the al fresco repast; and he shot very wildly afterwards, missing many birds without the slightest impairing of his joyousness. When the sport was over, and he and Lord Armidale were slowly returning to the Grange, they encountered "dear Clara" and Viola, who had come to meet them. As a matter of course, Lord Armidale took possession of his betrothed, and Miss Dallas and the Colonel were left to entertain each other.

They walked through the wooded ways together, and they paused for a moment in a dell where the leaves had drifted together, to note how the great artist Nature had dashed her colors on the trees and made them look beautiful. And, so strong is the magician Love, this middle-aged soldier grew young again; all the forgotten romance of his nature came surging to his heart. All through his after-life he would remember how, at that instant, dead leaves rustled about his feet, the wind sighed through half-denuded boughs, and the touch of Clara's hand upon his arm thrilled him with ecstacy.

"My stay at the Grange has been a very happy one," he said; "but the happiest experiences must have an end. To-morow I go away."

"So soon, and so suddenly?" asked Clara. Her eyes, her reproachful tones, said much more, filling him with almost delirious joy, yet, in the height of his delirium, he recognized that he must not presume upon the tenderness they implied.

"I am called away on pressing business," he said. "I am going to Italy."

"On what errand?" asked Clara, with the most innocent and child-like directness.

"To develop a gold mine," said the Colonel, with a jocose playfulness. "Until to-day, Miss Dallas, I have been a poor man; now I see a fair prospect of becoming a rich one. I believe my gold mine will produce not less than five thousand a year. In that case, would you like to go halves with me?"

He looked into her eyes eagerly. In spite of the jocoseness, he was trembling with eagerness, and he saw clearly enough that she apprehended the serious meaning which underlay his jest. Clara Dallas became suddenly grave, and hesitated for many seconds ere she answered. Then, with a beaming smile, she uttered the monosyllable "Yes," and let him withdraw the gloved hand from his arm and press his lips to it passionately.

He broke into jest and laughter again after that; the homeward walk was a very merry one. When they reached the Grange he asked for his host, and was informed that William Burgot intended to dine alone in his study, having given orders that no one should disturb him.

So Colonel Pettitt, ere he entered to dress for dinner, asked for pen and paper and wrote a brief note.

"Dear Burgot,—I am called away hastily on pressing business, and I regret that, as I must leave by early train to-morrow and you are desirous of an invalid's privacy, I shall have no opportunity to thank you personally for all your hospitable kindness. I am, for the moment, very short of cash; can you conveniently increase my indebtedness by lending me one hundred pounds?"

"Yours,
"M. Pettitt."

"There," murmured the Colonel, in triumphant soliloquy—"if that draws first blood, as I feel sure it will, I shall know that I am on the right track."

As he was tying his cravat, the servant returned, bearing an unaddressed envelope containing ten ten-pound bank-notes, bearing also the message that the Squire's arm was so painful that he could not hold a pen; but he was very sorry to learn that Colonel Pettitt was forced to depart so hastily, and he would be pleased to entertain him again at as early a date as possible.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

Dinner was over at Burgot Grange, and Clara was saying "Good-night" to everybody, in spite of the Colonel's whispered reproaches, pleading that she must really go and entertain their invalid for half an hour.

She found him in his study, lying back in an easy-chair, but with an expression upon his haggard face which denoted anything but mental ease. He felt that the game he had played so long and so skillfully was almost lost. But there was yet one move to be taken which might save him from utter ruin.

"Clara," he said, "do you know that Viola and Lord Armidale are to be married this day month?"

"No," she answered, in surprise.

"It was only settled to-day. Could we not arrange a double wedding?"

She looked at him earnestly, not quite sure of his meaning.

"Our wedding Clara."

There was not a word of love—not a profession of attachment. Her thoughts flew back to that scene in the dell, only a few hours old, when the leaves rustled about her feet and the wind sighed through the branches, and the consciousness of a man's strong passions stirred her sluggish blood a little.

Certainly she should have preferred the Colonel; but William Burgot had fifteen thousand a year.

"Clara will you be my wife? Will you marry me this day month?"

And "dear Clara, thinking she would take marvellously good care the engagement was not proclaimed until the Colonel had deaprted, answered—

"I will."

CHAPTER XIII.

The weeks crept slowly, slowly. All things are comparative, and, above all, the flight of time. It was a long, long month which preceded the day fixed for the double espousals—the marriage of Lord Armidale and Viola Burgot, of William Burgot and Clara Dallas.

Doubtless there were multitudes of insolvent merchants and impecunious men of pleasure looking forward to the coming maturity of bills they could not hope to meet, to whom the month appeared to melt away with incredible swiftness; but to these four happy or unhappy lovers it seemed as though it would never come to an end.

How many mariages would take place if the contracting parties, who anticipated them with such eagerness, could throw off the glamour of soft mendacious speeches and loving half-truths, and read with accuracy each other's hearts? How very rarely do men tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" to the woman whom they profess to adore! Somebody once wished, in a moment of enthusiasm, that he had windows to his soul. Perhaps it never occurred to him how very often he would need to put up the shutters, and to stop with care every chink and crevice through which a warning beacon-light might faintly glimmer.

Lord Armidale had won his bride in sense; but not as he won her long years before, when they had lounged amongst the wild-flowers and the weeds, beside the idle fountain. the shattered column and the headless Apollo.

Then she had given herself to him utterly. All the rich treasure of maidenly affection she had lavished ungrudgingly and without stint, with a child's innocence, with an Italian woman's fiery enthusiasm, with burning impassioned words which concealed nothing; for in her spotless purity and her unconventional ignorance she knew not that there was aught to conceal. She had shown him every thought of her young heart and had made him feel that in every fibre of her being she belonged to him, and to him alone.

Now she had given herself again, promising to become his wife; but as yet there was no real surrender. Long tete-a-tetes had they, as English custom allows, long walks, and rides and drives, in which she talked fluently upon every conceivable topic with erudition which astonished him, proving how indefatigably she must have ransacked the books of the monastery and bringing to mind again and again his jesting speech of their first interview "She who has access to a great library may become the wisest woman in the world."

But when he would have discussed a dearer theme, their mutual love, she was unaccountably silent and irresponsive. His tenderest eloquence could do no more than bring a look of inexplicable sadness into her beautiful eyes; and when, forgetting with a lover's impetuosity his awe of her queenliness and of her stately unapproachability, he would have caught her to his heart, she shrank with the old cry, "Spare me for the present—not yet, not yet!"

No wonder that Claude, Lord Armidale, was eager for the day when all reticence should be at an end and he should in truth possess his lovely bride.

Nor was the girl herself less eager. The strain upon her was so great, the constant necessity of self-cntrol was so imperative and so trying, it was so difficult and so repugnant constantly to wear the mask of even passive hypocrisy, that she panted for the day when she might dash it to the ground, and stand forth, her own avenger, to enjoy with vindictive delight the completeness of her retaliation.

"Dear Clara" was not less anxious to be united to the man of her choice. Colonel Pettitt had started for Italy, she reasoned; but in this age of swift steamers and express trains, such a journey was a mere bagatelle, to be accomplished in an incredibly short time, if such were the will of the traveller. How long would it take the Colonel to develop the gold mine, or, in more sober English, to transact the business which might make him a rich man? Probably, thought Clara, he had heard of the death of a distant relative of whom he was the direct heir; so large a fortune could hardly fall to him in any other way.

CONTROLLING CONTAGIOUS DISEASES IN ANIMALS BY VACCINATION.

Dr. D. E. Salmon, veterinary surgeon presents somewhat at length in the American Agriculturist for Sept. reasons for believing that we shall very soon come to control such contagious diseases as Pleuro-pneumonia, Glanders, Antrax, Rabies, Texas Cattle Fever, Cholera among Hogs, Fowls etc., by a system of inoculation, similarly to human vaccination for small-pox. He says: ".....Not to mention other facts bearing on the subject, it may be added that their seems good reason to believe that, with a mild form of virus of the different contagious diseases, we may be able, not only toward them off by vaccination, but that we may carry the insusceptibility to the most perfect degree, and by confering this quality on all the breeding animals, we may createbreeds that will transmit it by heredity and thus rid ourselves of the ravages caused by the animal plauges. Much research, however, is still required to settle these points, and to render the methods of vaccination practical and safe; but with an out-look brighter than ever before, it is advisable to redouble our efforts in this direction, and to accomplished all that the most advanced scisnce of the time canattain to. We shall doubtless meet many discouragements, and be foiled many times in our endeavors, but with determination, energy, and perseverance, success must surley crown our efforts at last, and this class of diseases which has discouraged our most advanced thinkers, and has been shrouded in the profounndest mystery for so many years, will disappear—conquered by that perfect science which patient work alone candevelop.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

Cures all diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, female complaints, nervous and general debility, and builds up the entire system when broken down by disease.

PREPARING FOR THE FAIR.

In the September number of the American Agriculturist Dr. George Thurber illustrates a comon trouble at our local fairs as follows: "People bring things, which, not being properly exhibited, are unnoticed, and, as a consequence, they do not bring anything next year. It should be the business of some one at every fair to look out for these details. Many a good housewife robs her garden to make up a large decorative bouquet, and when she reaches the fair, finds no place to put it. It can only be laid down some where, probably in the sun, no one to take charge of it or care for it. It is the neglect of these little things that discourages contributors. Take such a bouquet, for example, a proper person in charge, if he could not find a proper vase to hold water for it, he would take some newspapers, make a big ball of mud around the stems, bind the papers around the ball, and the bouquet could stand erect on its mud base, and remain fresh for days........ Those who have in their gardens cannas, castor oil plants, large coleuses, or other decorative plants that can be spared, can do much toward decorating, but they must begin a weekor two beforehand. Get from the store, nail-kegs, and boxes of various sizes; if likely to be heavy put in rope handles Take up such plants as can be spared for the purpose, and pot them in these kegs or boxes, taking up as much earth with the roots as practicable. Do this towards night, place in shed or in other sheltered place, where the wind will not reach them, and water both soil and foilage. The few that wilt will recover in a day or two, when they may be placed outside. When ready to take them to the fair, use stakes and twine to prevent them from jolting in the wagon and getting broken. When the plants are set in place, cover the kegs or boxes with brown paper. If one has plenty of Arbor-vitæ trees, he can cut them judiciously and find that the twigs or branches are things of which their cannot be too many for decoration. Let whoever goes to the fair with the intention of working, take a paper of stout tacks another of stout pins, balls of twine, fine and coarse, several pencils, some blank cards, a stout jack knife, and above all, a cheerful spirit, that leads to the doing of everything that needs to be done to make all things show to their best—bring order out of chaos."

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

The virtue of the most of the patent medicines with which the market is flooded lies in the name, but the virtues of Burdock Blood Bitters lie in the fact that they cleanse the blood of impurities, and cure dyspepsia, biliousness and indestion. Price $1 00, trial bottle 10 cents.

A BABY'S GRAVE.

A baby's grave at Glasgow, Md., received for nine years the most careful attention, flowers being frequently planted on it, and the sod always kept in perfect order. Mr. Brown and Mrs. Ellison, each unknown to the other, were doing this work of love. Each had lost an infant and supposed this was its grave. Brown had erected a tombstone lately, and then controversy arose, Mrs. Ellison insisted that it must be taken down. The Church authorities held several meetings of investigation without reaching any conclusion, and then somebody suggested that a neglected grave near the disputed one be opened. This was done, and Brown conceded that the coffin found therein was the one that had inclosed his child. The stone was then removed.

THE OLD RELIABLE.

The remedy that has stood the test of time is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Almost infallible to cure dysentery, cholera morbus, and all manner of fluxes, cholic cramp, cholera infantum, and every form of summer complaints.

FOOLING THE FAMILY.

On a Canadian Southern train, the other day, was a man with his wife and several children, bound for some point in the West, and when St. Thomas was reached the man got out with others and rushed into the eating house, and hurriedly called for coffee, bread, meat, etc., and began to cram himself so fast that a disgusted Detroiter at his elbow finally laid down a silver dollar on the counter.

"Dollar—yes—I see," mumbled the man, with his mouth full; "yes, I'll bet a dollar to a cent that I'm a hog, but you'll lose if I kissed the bet. You see I told the old woman and children that we couldn't get anything to eat this side of Detroit, and I forgot to fill up in five or six minutes and get back, or they'll tumble to the racket. Please pass the mustard—only fifty seconds left to fill up, pick my teeth and get back!"—M. Quad.

A GENERAL DEFEATED.

A Mrs. J. G. Robertson writes: "I was suffering from general debility, want of appetite, constipation, etc., so that life was a burden; after using Burdock Blood Bitters I felt better than for years. I cannot praise your Bitters too much.

THE LATCH STRINGS OF HEAVEN.

That quiet old colored man, known to every one around the Central Market as Rise Up Jerry, will be missed from the rounds he traveled for years. He is dead. He was living with his daughter on Wilkins street, and had been poorly for a long time. Jerry was past 80 years old, and while he had grown feeble for a year or more, no one suspected that death was near. The other day, as he sat in his big rocking chair, and, after he had been dozing for half an hour, he asked for his two grand-children. They were called in, and as they hung about his knees the old man said:

"Chill'en, dis ole frame hain't got long to hang on. I'se feelin powerful queer to-day, an' I want ye clost to me. De little chill'en am de latch strings to de gates ob Heaben."

In the shade of a plum tree, with the birds singing above and the breeze tempering the heat, the children nestled down, and all three fell asleep—a sleep in which the old man's soul passed away so quiet that he did not move a hand. When the children awoke he had long been dead. They had gone with him across the dark valley—walked in the radiance of Heaven's beacon—halted at the golden gates and lifted the latch string. Softly the gates swung open at their childish touch, and the old man had kissed them and passed through.

HAVE YOU TRIED IT?

If so you can testify to its marvellous powers of healing and recommend it to your friends. We refer to Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, the grand specific for all summer complaints, diarrhœa, cholera morbus, dysentery, cramps, cholic, sickness of the stomach and bowel complaints of infants or adults. Let its merits be known to all who have not used it.

Far from it. We, however, do not hesitate to commend Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.'s Hair Vigor, which not only has the effect in some cases of making the hair grow on heads once bald, but cleans the scalp and restores gray and faded hair to its original color and vitality, imparting to it the glossiness and softness of youth. The evidences of its utility are too numerous and of too high a character to admit of any doubt. It required years of study and scientific experiment to decide upon the combination of ingredients that would accomplish what Ayer's Hair Vigor now does.—The Interior, Chicago, Ill.

HOPEVILLE.

From our Correspondent.

The harvest in this neighborhood is near all completed, and never was better.

The weather has been very hot, and every thing very dry. The wells are about dried up, and a scarcity of water prevails.

Bush fires are breaking out, and look very dangerous. On the 31st August the wind raised and created considerable alarm to those in the neighborhood of the fires, but towards evening it calmed down again, not without doing some harm, however.

Mr. Henry Munshaw, who has been putting in his first year's farming in Proton, on lot 28, in the 13th concession, had his frame barn and outbuildings burned, together with his entire crop and three horses. I have not heard if there was any insurance, but believe their was a small one. His loss, however will be heavy.

Hopeville is still improving some.—Between building, and improvement in buildings, it is progressing steadily.

FLESHERTON.

From our own Correspondent.

J. Teeter had his team killed by lightning while his boy was driving them from the field on Sept. 1st.

Mr. Doll arrived home from the Continent. There was a grand demonstration and bonfire and the boys had their hands greased with the needful.

Monday, at 3 p.m., the aerial region became of a dense Egyptian darkness, at half-past three the shops were all lighted up for the evening and schools dismissed, and at five the sky assumed the appearance of a sea of brass and remained that way until sundown. The atmosphere was oppressive; there was also a quantity of ashes drifting. Some attributed the phenomena to it being council day and they being so lax in their duty; others thought the end was coming, but I will not attempt to say what was the real cause, I will not attempt to philosphize. We are pleased to say that the Council did take a step in the right direction, and considered the matter worthy their attention with the exception of Sam Pedlar; but poor Sam came out the buzzard. He will himself stand out in the cold next year. I wonder if Barny O'Hare would know a hole in the sidewalk from an auction sale bill. It is surprising how fast some people are in the manner of their surroundings. But we did not reckon that our Pathmaster could have as good Irish in so short a time with Mr. Kingston this summer. The grant to the roads was $75 between the village and the station, and $100 from the station to Priceville, a small favor but thankfully received. Where is Ratepayer now? Echo answers where?

Mr. J. Herd left yesterday for Toronto with some very neat got up honey for the exhibition.

Dr. Sproule, M. P., disturbed the peace of a quiet family in this village this morning. We wish Dr. and Mrs. Sproule many happy days.

JOTTINGS FROM MAXWELL.

From our own Correspondent.

The average man thinks it has come to be "pretty near warm" just now; 98 in the shade!

The harvest is pretty well advanced in this neighborhood and there is every prospect of one of the best crops evere grown in this township.

The editor of the Advance passed through this village Saturday last, on a butcher's cart. We thought he would be in advance of that, after his agricultural diatribes against the STANDARD.

Mr. J. W. H. Milne, of this village, has left us to go to Kingston to further prosecute his studies at Queen's. He has the best wishes of his numerous friends here and elsewhere.

One of our enterprising young lads, having a desire to try his skill, and also to try the running capabilities of a tricycle, lately built by Mr. Stephens, of this place, afforded considerable amusement to a number of our villagers. Mounted on the vehicle, he started, and all went well for about a hundred yards when—ah! woeful tale—one wheel rolled over a little higher ground than the other—he lost his balance, and capsized, nothing daunted, he again made an attempt, and it was not until he met with similar success that he withdrew.

REMINISCENCES OF A TRIP FROM OWEN SOUND TO SAULT STE MARIE.

Being aware that Algamo at present attracts great attention from the fact that a railway will be some day built from Sault Ste Marie to French River. As I am well acquainted with the political, social and financial affairs of this extensive District I purpose enlightening your readers, on questions of the day in Algoma. But first of all I will give some ideas of a journey through part of Algoma. Leaving Owen Sound by one of the steamers of the Collingwood and Sault line, you sail through the calm waters of the Georgian Bay, with the Bruce Peninsula to the westward for about eighty miles, here the more turbulent waters of Lake Huron flow through what is known as the gap. From here to Killarney the scenery is grand; past islands some of them devoid of vegetation, some again are like Juan Fernandez, man is lord of all he surveyes. Presently the whistle is blown and the fenders are let down to keep the vessel from the dock. Killarney owes its existence to fishing and cordwood. It is the best fishing station on Georgian Bay or Lake Huron. The fish are packed in water tight boxes with ice, these boxes are mounted on wheels, and hold about four tons of ice and fish. The average is one hundred of such boxes a week. We are now one hundred and ten miles from Owen Sound thirty miles westward brings Manitowaning, on Manitoulin. It is a flourishing village and promises some day to be capital of Manitoulin. Twenty miles northward Little Current is reached. It has been settled longer than the last named place; but the people are not alive to their own interests. The Government is at present deepening the channel, at an expense of twentyfive thousand dollars, which makes Little Current a little "flush". The steam boat channel has a depth of 12 feet of water, this will not let heavy laden vessels of large size through, and as this, the inside route, is the best and calmest, it is desirable that the channel be deepened. The bottom is hard limestone. But as I have occupied space enough I conclude for the present hoping to continue the subject next week.

LOUIS N, THIBAUDEAU.

LITTLE CURRENT.

From our own Correspondent.

August 26th, 1881.

In my last I had begun to tell of the Channel work at Little Current. Well a hole is drilled about four feet into the rock with steel drills made of 1½ inch bars. These are handled by three men each, who stand on a flat scow, and raise the drill up and down after the manner of a churn dash. A large hole is left in the centre of the scow; an iron pipe runs down from the surface of the water to the rock, this guides the drill as it works up and down. When three or four holes are drilled, the diver puts in as many charges of dynamite. Dynamite is glycerince mixed with clay. These cases of dynamite are joined to wires coiled on a reel lying on the scow. When the diver ascends, the other ends of the wires are inserted into an electric battery. Then the scows are moved a few feet, and about twenty turns given to the battery, and a sharp report is heard, and the water is seen bubbling to the surface with perhaps one or two dead fish. Then the diver goes down and picks the broken rock into an iron basket which holds a yard. Then the basket is hauled up by means of a windlass. The stone is loaded on scows and taken to form a breakwater. A force of about twenty men takes up about twenty cubic yards a day. After a short description of the diving part of the work I am done with Little Current.

The diving suit consists of an inside suit of woolen cloth, and an outer one made of rubber. This suit has coat, pants and socks, as it were, all in one garment. Into this the diver gets as if it were a bag with legs on. Then a helmet is put on, resting on the shoulders, to this the edges of the dress are fastened so as to exclude water. Then the head piece, made of zinc, with two eye glasses, and one mouth glass is screwed to the helmet. The dress is now both air tight and water tight. It is however connected by hose with the air pump. My pen fails to describe the air pump, but it is worked by two men who turn it after the manner of a grindstone. The diver descends by means of an iron ladder, and can remain under water two or three hours. I nearly forgot to say that he has one hundred and twenty five pounds of lead as weights attached to his sides; besides boots which weigh twenty five pounds each. The whole is under the able management of A. T. Kilganan.

SIR,—The height of a hill may be easily determined by the depth of the valley below. Pure undefiled Nature, has no contradictions. He who assumes virtue is at least expected to be possessed of that valuable commodity, and that his antecedents will be a proof of the genuiness of his claim.

In the last issue of your valuable paper appears an advertisement over the signature of "Kay & Thomas," announcing to their patrons that all work done in their shop during the past summer would be repaired free of cost, for that "it was the fault of a bad and unprincipled young man we had working for us during that time."

Sandy and Grove how could you tell such a lie? The devil, incarnate, could not be guilty of a more unblushing falsehood! Is not the record of your villainous work a standing topic of comment throughout the country during the past seven years? The inferior quality of your work, and the leather you applied therein, is a standing disgrace to the boot and shoe trade of Markdale; and the work coming from the celebrated firm of Kay & Thomas, will, no doubt need speedy repairs, as many a confiding customer can testify to; but the boldest piece of impudence it has ever been my lot to witness is the fact of Kay & Thomas endeavoring to saddle the evil effects of their rotten stock upon the shoulders of your humble servant. The public may be well aware that I was not the purchaser of the rotten leather that has caused grief in many a well regulated family. No doubt a consciousness of guilt caused them an (useless) attempt to shift the odium of their own villainy upon my head. It is a generally recognized rule, that when scoundrels injure you they wish to persecute you afterwards. I could afford the loss of $7.30 in a settlement with Kay & Thomas, and say nothing about it, neither would I notice any words coming from moral bankrupts, were it not that in duty bound to those I am associated with in business, I desire to set myself right before the public.

Had it not been brought to my notice by the public, I would not have supposed that I was the person meant in the scurilous advertisement referred to. I am not in the habit of handling filthy things—let me wash my hands.

With kindest regards to yourself, Mr. Editor, and your numerous readers, I am, yours truly,

WILLIAM MCLEOD.

Markdale, Aug. 16th, 1881.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—In your last issue a correspondent signing "Taxarious" suggests the plan of levying a "tax" to raise money for church purposes. He would have church officers go to the assessment roll and "clap on a tax on each member." Of course the various denominations would have to "go and do likewise."

I have seldom met with a man who did not claim to belong to some religious denomination, at the same time there might be considerable difficulty in tracing church connection, some having to go back to relatives long deceased, in order to get a footing in any church; but if a tax was in the comet many of the loose fish who swim in shoals would come boldly out and deny "the God that bought them," and fling churches and everything religious to the wind. This would be "judgment beginning at the house of God." Even this, in my opinion, might "work for good; the world and the church are too near neighbors. There is a strong feeling of dislike to the man who does not go to 'meeting;' he who does not attend public worship with and religious body is generally looked upon as an infidel; few indeed can stand being rated as an infidel: but if Taxarious had his way, there are many who, in the meantime, purchase the popular belief that they are Christians, by attending some place of public worship, and putting a copper into the collection box as it goes round, (you know, sir, that a copper makes as much noise as a quarter), who, if a tax was imposed, would throw all these considerations aside, and resist the tax on the principle (?) that he does not believe it right to tax religion! money is his god, and rather than part with it he will be called infidel, or anything else you choose. But Taxarious seems like a good many more now write to the Press, he does not seem to put himself to much trouble to trace the working of the system he proposes. He has logic and reasoning enough in some ways, but seems to overlook the inevitable results of his proposal if adopted: for the system of supporting churches by municipal means was once introduced, the next step (an easy one, to) is to Provincial Legislature, and surely no one could object to a "Minister of Religion" as well as a Minister of Education, &c., in our administration, hence a State Church or Churches, and I cannot for a moment suppose that Taxarious is ignorant of the baneful effects of a State Church—a Church supported by and under the control of the State, receiving its laws, rites and ceremonies from Blake and Company instead of the everlasting Jehovah. Church history abounds with evidence of the enormous evils of a State Church! No Church in connection with the State can long retain spiritual purity. It has never been so in the past, and it would be vain to look for it in the future! The Church and the world are two distinct organizations. Our Saviour said, "My kingdom is not of this world." "Ye," He said to his followers, "are not of this world." "I have chosen you out of the world," &c., &c., and the nearer the Church comes to the world she is the further from her great Head. It has always been so. Some may ask proof for these sweeping statements. The intelligent Christian [illegible] the truth of my statements; but to satisfy others I will give one proof, one quite at hand, a proof so plain "that he who runs may read."

I will not ask you to go back many hundred years, not even to the time when the Pope swayed the destinies of the whole continent of Europe, nearly; but we will take the Anglican Church. The Episcopal Church as established in England, and as it exists in the United States, and in Canada, at the present day, so that there can be no cavil about it.—Why is it that that Church symbolizes so much with Popery, by retaining so many rites and observances practised in that Church, which are clearly unscriptural; and claim their origin in the Church of Rome, such as Liturgies, stated Holidays, as Easter, Christmas &c.; Godfathers and Godmothers; the sign of the Cross in Baptism; Confirmation; kneeling at the Lord's Supper? I boldly maintain that there is not one passage in all the New Testament commanding or even sanctioning any of these rites. Ha, "Thus saith the Lord," cannot be produced for any one of them. They all had their origin in a corrupt Church,—a Church full of man's inventions and abominable superstitions; and why are they still in the ritual of the English Church? just because that Church is a State Church, completely under the control of the secular power and the high dignitaries of the Church! It is a well established fact that the first Liturgy for the Protestant Episcopal Church of England, was a digest of the five Romish missals of the several dioceses of Satum, York, Hereford, Bangor, and Lincoln, in the second year of King Edward's reign, and these constitue the basis of the Book of Common Prayer as now used in Great Britain and America; and in the reign of Elizabeth, when the Liturgy of the Church of England was being settled, a great many of the pious and most learned in that Church were exceedly anxious to abolish these Romish rites, or, at least, have them left optional, or indifferent. When the divines appointed to report brought in a report, which left it indifferent, the Queen drew her pen over the lines which represented it, and left it binding; and it is just as binding to day as it was three hundred years ago, not because it is the will and command of God, but because the Crown and the Court Clergy now, as then, wish a gorgeous ritual, rather than conform to "Heaven's artless, easy, unincumbered plan;" hence, in that Church, there are altars, candles, incense and many gaudy trappings to please and satisfy the outward man, instead of looking to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world; but further was it not because "the law allowed it" that a brutal soldiery went forth, and in the name of Majesty, burned, or shot, or cut asunder, many men, women and children, sparing neither age nor sex, simply because they would not conform to the rites and cerimonies of the National Church! A government may aid a Church with a little money under some circumstances, and do little or no harm. The British government have aided Dissenters at times.—There was a "Regium Donun" grant to a Dissenting body in Ireland, which we are told did good; but I maintain the two ought to be separate and distinct, or, at least, that the Crown have no right to dictate in matters of religion. We have this very strikingly illustrated in Britain. South of the Tweed (England) where, as we have seen, the Crown and Court Clergy regulate the wotship, we have a host of innovations of man's invention, whereas north of the tweed (Scotland), where the people—not the Government—inaugurated and completed the Reformation, the Church is comparatively pure and free from these innovations. Let us, therefore, Mr. Taxarious, support our churches without municipal aid, or the "strong arm of the law," and let us see that our rights as Christians are kept inviolate, and "stand fast in the liberts wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.

Your correspondent "Fair Play" takes "new gtound." I am afraid if Religion cannot be supported without going hand-in-hand with whiskey, its chances are small indeed.—If the money spent on whiskey was spent for religious purposes how very different it would be! but it is a fact that the men who spend most on whiskey, are not only poor men in the church, but are also exceedingly weak, if not dangerous, members of society. The word of God does not condemn the moderate use of intoxicating liquors, neither do I condemn them; but the Bible does condemn the immoderate use of them, and so should every man worthy of the name; so, then, Mr. Fair Play, I cannot go with you on the whiskey,—I will reply to subscriber next week.

M.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Judging from Mr. Brown's last letter, it is quite evident that he is very imperfectly informed on the side of the matter he has undertaken to defend, and on the other side of the question it is quite clear he knows nothing at all, and before Mr. Brown undertakes to discuss Church matters again I would recommend him to learn the A B C of Church history. It is a strong temptation to come down heavily upon him, but as it would be too much like bringing out a cannon to shoot a fly, we will allow his position to save him this time; moreover his tone and diction are such that as a correspondent, I cannot allow myself to take any further notice of him, but, as silence on my part might be misconstrued, and as a great many of your readers are interested in this question, if you will kindly allow me the space, I will put the matter as briefly as the nature of the subject will admit of.

Among the Jews none could approach the presence of God but such as were particularly appointed by Him. When God instituted offerings and sacrifices, and the other positive parts of His worship, He at the same time set apart a peculiar order of men to be the administrators of them, so that the persons who were minister were equally of divine institutions with the ministrations themselves. Thus Aaron and his sons and the Levites were consecrated by the express command of God (Leviticus, viii) and had all of them their distinct commissions from heaven; and no less than death was the penalty of invading their office (Num., xviii-7).

And as St. Jerome rightly observes, "What Aaron and his sons and the Levites were in the Temple, such are the Bishops, Presbyters, Deacons in the Christian Church." These are appointed by God, as they were, and therefore it can be no less sacrilege to usurp their office. Nay, it must be far greater, because the honour of the ministry rises in proportion to the dignity of the ministration; and therefore, as it cannot be denied, but that realities are more valuable than types, and heaven is better than the Land of Canaan, so the sacraments of the Gospel are certainly to be preferred before all the offerings of the Mosaic Law.

And if we would but consider our Saviour's example, we should find that, though he wanted no gift to qualify him for this office, as having the divine nature inseparably united to His human, and giving sufficient evidences of his abilities, when but twelve years old. And although the necessity of the times called loudly for such an instuctor, yet He would not enter upon His office till He was externally commissioned thereto by the visible descent of the Holy Ghost upon Him, and by an audible voice from Heaven proclaiming Him to be the Messiah, when he was about thirty years old.

All the former part of His life He spent in a private capacity, doubtless to teach us that no internal qualification, no good end, or intention, can warrant a man's excorising anyholy function without a divine commission.

And we may observe that though our Saviour had many followers, yet none of them presumed to preach, or baptize, or perform any other sacred office, till thay were particularly commissioned by Him. He first commissioned the Twelve, that they might be with Him, and that He might send them forth to teach, and to have power to heal sickness, and to cast out devils (Mark iii, 14-15). And afterwards the other seventy which went out upon a like errand, were especially appointed by Him. So likewise after His resurrection, when He advanced the eleven to be Apostles, He did it in a most solemn manner, first breathing on them and communicating to them the Holy Ghost. And after He had assured them of his authority, He gave them the power of the keys and the authority to exercise all the holy offices in the Christian Church, and to convey the same authority to others, promising that He would be always with them, even to the end of the world. From which it is plain that it was our Saviour's express will and intention that all those who are ministers in His Church should either mediately or immediately derive their authority from Him. And accordingly we may observe that in the beginning of Christianity, all those who officiated in divine matters received their commission either from Christ himself or from Apostolic hands. The seven Deacons were constituted by the Apostles (Acts, vi, 6) and St. Paul and St. Barnabas ordained elders in every church which they planted.

The other Apostles used the same method, as did also their successors after them, as is sufficiently evident from Scripture and ancient history, which abundantly proves the necessity of a divine commission, in order to the being a minister in the Christian Church. If it be asked "Who may be truly said to have this divine commission?" we need not doubt to affirm that none but those who are ordained by such as are now commonly called Bishops, can have any authority to minister in the Christian Church. For that the power of ordination is solely lodged in that order is proved from the institution of our Saviour and the constant practice of the Apostles. That the power of ordination lodged in the Apostles was of divine institution, I suppose no one will question who reads these words of our Saviour to them after His resurrection. "As my Father hath sent me so send I you," (John xx, 21) "And so I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," (Matt. xxviii, 20). From which it is clear, first, that it was by a divine commission that our Saviour ordained His Apostles; secondly, that by virtue of the same commission the Apostles were empowered to ordain others; and thirdly, that this commission to ordain was always to continue in the Christian Church, and to remain in such hands as the Apostles should convey it to. From which it naturally follows that whoever has a power to ordain, must derive it from the commission which our Saviour received from God and gave to His Apostles.

The only way then to know in whose hands this commission is now lodged, is to enquire what persons were appointed by the Apostles to succeed them to their office. Now it is plain to any person reading the Scriptures without prejudice, that there were three distinct orders of ministers in the Christian Church in the Apostles' day, which were designed to continue to the end of the world.

For besides these two which our adversaries allow, viz: Deacon, Presbyters or Elders, who are sometimes called Bishops, we read of another order which was superior to, and had authority over both these; such were the Apostles Timothy, Titus, and others.

For it is plain from the Epistle St. Paul wrote to the two last mentioned that they presided over the Presbyters. They had power to enforce them to their duty, to receive accusations against them, and judicially to pass sentence upon them, which abundantly proves their superiority, and several others were appointed by the Apostles to the same office; as St. James, surnamed the Just and Epaphroditus, who were termed Apostles or Bishops by all antiquity. Any reasonable man will grant that the words Bishop and Presbyter being promiscuously used were Presbyters being called Bishops in Scripture, does not prove that therefore all the powers which belong to those we now call Bishops were lodged in the Presbyters. The only method then to prove that the power of ordination belongs to Presbyters, is to show that whoever in scripture are called Presbyters or Bishops were invested with that power, which can never be done. For if Presbyters or Elders had the power of ordination, for what reason can we suppose that St. Paul should leave Titus in Crete on purpose to ordain elders in every city, as he did, (Titus, i, 5) when we know that that island had been converted to christianity long before Titus came thither, and therefore doubtless had many Presbyters among them to preach and administer the sacrament to the inhabitants, and as to Timothy's ordination, St. Paul ascribes it to his own laying on of hands (2 Tim. i, 6). Although one or more Presbyters might lay on their hands in concurrence with him to testify their consent, as is the custom at the present time in the ordination of a Presbyter, and even sometimes at the conseration of a Bishop. The Apostolic office was designed to continue in the Church of Christ, and so the Apostles took care to ordain some to succeed them who were at first called Apostles, though they afterwards in modesty declined so high a title, and took the title Bishop, which in consequence was only used when referring to those who succeded to the Apostolic office and to what has been said we might for further proof add the joint testimony of all Christians for fifteen hundred years together; nor can one single instance of a valid ordination be produced in all that time other than by a Bishop. It seems therefore very strange that if Presbyters ever had the power of ordination, they should so tamely give up their right without any complaint, or so much as leaving anything upon record as witness to their original authority to after ages.

The argument in brief is as follows:—In the lifetime of the Apostles we find three orders, Apostles, Presbyters or Bishops, and Deacons. In the next generation we find three orders, Bishops Presbyters, and Deacons. The last thirty years of the first century is almost an entire blank in Church history, so that we cannot distinctly connect the latter with the former; but it is only reasonable from the abovefacts that the later Bishops were appointed to succeed to the position and authority of the Apostles; that the title of Bishop originally common to all Presbyters was upon the decease of the Apostles appropriated to those filling their office, and to none other. So we may therefore safely affirm that the Episcopal form of government subsisted in fact, if not in name, in the Church from the very beginning.

IS IT POSSIBLE.—That a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do? In the hurry of going to press on Thursday evening last we omitted to mention that the Rev. A. Wilson was the officiating minister at a marriage that took place on that day. We regret this exceedingly as it was the first couple Mr. Wilson had married since he was ordained. Such mistakes, though very annoying, are likely to occur in the best regulated offices. We do not think any one who known us, would for a moment harbor the thought that it was purposely with the direct intention of insulting Mr. Wilson, or the respectable body over which he presides.

Dr. Carson never claimed for his Stomach and Constipation Bitters any Miraculous POWER OF HEALING, but in the quiet consciousness of their medicinal virtues he prescribes them for those who suffer from derangement of the stomach, Bowels Liver and Kidneys. W. J. McFarland arrived on Wednesday train, together with his wife and family who met him at Belleville, and were met at the train by a large number of friends. They were conveyed to their residence where a number of their warm friends gathered to give him and Mrs. Mc. a welcome after his trip to British Isles, and to enjoy "a cosy cup o' tea." The boys of the village also paid him a complement by having an immense bonfire on the square. Mr. Mc. feels well and is much improved in health.

On Monday afternoon many persons were under the impression that the oft repeated prophesy of the ending of all things was about to take place. At 2 p. m. the sun had a blood red appearance, and at 4 o'clock it could not be seen at all, and lamps had to be lighted. The sky overhead presented a weird and lurid glare. However it was ascertained that the phenomenon arose from dense smoke caused by bush fires, and the timid again breathed freely. At 6 o'clock it was as dark as midnight, and people going about the street had to carry lanterns. Ashes and burnt leaves fell in quantities and at times was almost blinding.

STILL ANOTHER.—We are pleased to chronicle the marriage of one of our prominent citizens, Thos. S. Sproule, Esq., M. D., M. P., to Miss Mary Alice Flesher, second daughter of W. K. Flesher, Esq., ex M. P. for East Grey. The interesting ceremony was performed at seven o'clock on Wednesday morning by Revs. Messrs. Philps and Galloway. The bride looked handsome, richly and artistically dressed and splendidly veiled. We are not accustomed to describe ladies' dresses, in fact we go to church on other business, so our lady readers will pardon the omission this time. When we get a little older in the Editorship we may try our hand. After the usual hand shaking and joy-wishing were over, the party repaired to the long dining-hall and did ample justice to a most sumptuous breakfast. The party then formed a procession and accompanied the happy couple to Flesherton Station, where they boarded the train for a somewhat extended bridal tour. We wish Dr. and Mrs. Sproule long life and much happiness.

Mr. W. F. Campbell held meetings in the several stations belonging to the Shelburne Mission, under charge of Rev. M. Turnbull, on the 13th inst. At the first meeting held in Dundalk the Incumbent opened the meeting with prayer and a short address. Rev. Mr. Campbell dwelt upon the importance of each one contributing, as God had prospered him, towards those "vast fields of missionary labor lying beyond our own immediate bounds," which were to a great extent powerless from want of means. The collection ($11.25) may be considered extremely good, as the majority of the inhabitants are by no means well off; the country being comparatively new. At Shelburne the meeting proved to be a very interesting one, there being four clergymen present—Rev. Mr. Rooney, (Toronto Diocese), Rev. R. S. Radcliffe, (Niagara Diocese). Each of the above named gentle spoke, and Mr. Campbell then gave a very clear statement of Diocesan and North-west Mission work. At Inistioge Mr. Campbell was met by the Rev. Mr. Ward of Markdale, who kindly took part in the proceedings with Mr. Campbell. Several people afterwards remarked that much light had been thrown on mission work, which had hitherto been very improperly understood by them.

We think the Temperance Division in this place is deserving of more support.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—I see the Advance of the 11th of August contains a long article from "Crusoe" of the Canibal Islands upon the show business. But it is his native element and would perhaps make a better showman than a reeve or warden, because when there is township matters of any importance to adjust Mr. Creasor has to be feed by the township. He is famous for personalities and ridiculing a man's best efforts to do good. A nice way for a local brother and a class leader to hold a man up before a Sabbath school, and when he fancied he was wrong in the man he triumphed over it. See how John Bull treats his brother and the irreverent quotations from the Bible—punning upon scripture, &c. Now, Mr. Editor, I waited to see if that person that was so basely abused, innocently with others, would retaliate, but in vain; they treat him with silent contempt; and as he is so far beneath their notice I will disdain to have anything more to say to him except ask him if the reeve shines to any better advantage since he made an exhibition of him to the public. Not many will dream that the reeve wrote those letters himself. The man that would write and oppose what would be a boon to the public of this locality would, in my estimation, have a poor chance to go to Parliament, when he would oppose improvements of such importance at home, what would he be worth as an M. P. The boat will never be launched. In regard to the town hall—no one said it was not right to build it. But why not build it out of township money and take credit for such, and let the grant go to the roads—$2,000 in the bank at 3 per cent. and such roads! But to say anymore about the roads would be like digging in the ashes as the roads are in a scadalous condition and to be seen by every person. I will let the people be judges. He has ceased to speak of township matters; perhaps the best policy, because he was generally committed himself. Now, Mr. Editor, I will give him a text for the next time he preaches—1st Kings ix, 2—"Be thou strong therefore and show thyself a man." These words were spoken by David to Solomon just on the eve of Solomon's accession to the throne of his father David." A man who is so full of himself that he can hold nothing else would have said "Why, I have nothing to do with manhood I am a king." But Solomon's wish was to be a true and noble man rather than a king which was far better. There are many reeves and wardens who have not been true men; they are either forgotten or only remembered with contempt and hatred, and there have been men who have sprung from even as low rank as that of a grain buyer that will shine for ever. Now, Mr. Editor, if this ratepayer will go into his best room and introduce himself to himself he will not like his companion; and if the old man's vision was clearer he would see my name on the roll, and if he has a desire to look into my moral and financial character he will find no blurs in the shape of church trials or church cloaks, or fifty cents on the dollar. And to you, Mr. Advance, if your last pepper-sauce was too hot it served you right. Take a lesson not to interfere in behalf of a self-constituted, infalible council again, but "folk maun do something for their bread and sae maun death." He says now that he has attained a certain knowledge he will turn to his attention to matters of more importance, viz: A boy dressed in woman's clothes in Markdale. But, Mr. Editor, the unthankful always existed. If it had not been for Correspondent and the STANDARD he would have had nothing of importance to print; now that the stream has dried up I am at a loss to know what he will do; but suppose like the rest of the royal family with the long ears, after having drink will quietly kick the bucket. Veracity—Fred Leitch's smash up not so. What way then? Tell his story No. 2. Strange to say it occurred in the very cut that Crusoe's tenant had the road job and the one that never was thought to be properly finished, but how the rent was paid that year is only known to Crusoe, Jack Smith and the lamp post. I ... hinted that I have instructors. I have my eye. But none but fools can agree with ratepayer. Also that I will be challenged for my name. Mr. Editor, my name is ready when he gives his, and if I hear any more from him I will publish his name, per my council. Thanks for space in your valuable paper.

YOUR CORRESPONDENT.

Messrs. A. Turner & Co.,

Gents—I take much pleasure in certifying to the benefit I have experienced from the use of B. B. Bitters. (By Telegraph to the Herald.)

An accident occured on the farm of John Atkinson on the first inst., which will likely prove fatal to a man named John Morrison. While running a steam threshing machine, the engine did not seem to make enough speed for the machinery and he turned the steam on suddenly, which broke the knuckle next the engine. The end of the tumbling shaft went up in the air 10 or 12 feet, and fell on the head of Morrison, dealing him a fearful blow. He has remained unconscious ever since, and will probably die.

Since the above was in type we learn that Morrison died in about an hour and a half after the accident,

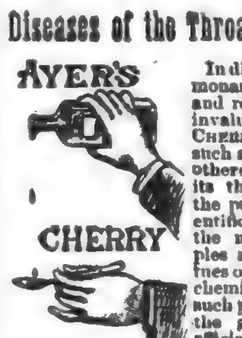
THE BEST REMEDY FOR Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.



In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

THE TEN

Insurance Commandments.

1. Thou shalt insure thy real and personal estate and all that thou hast against fire, for—

Defending thyself from misfortune until old age,
Thy happiness shall equal thy wisdom.

2. Thou shalt not insure more than thou dost possess, for insurance is a business wherein thou canst not make money. This is simply thy duty in order to preserve what thou hast acquired.

Preserve that which thou shalt acquire,
Whoso is prudent guardeth his goods.

3. Thou shalt not insure less than thou dost possess—for what thou dost not insure, will not be paid in case of loss.

Though poverty is not a vice
To lose all is not a pleasure.

4. Thou shalt not make excessive declarations of value respecting thy property in case of fire; but thou shall state truly that which belongs to thee, that thou mayest not have a lawsuit or gain a bad reputation

As we make our bed so must we lie.

5. Thou shalt also exhort thy neighbors, thy friends, and thy relations to insure themselves, that they may escape loss, and that poverty through a loss by fire be not laid to thy charge.

That which comes by the flute goes by the drum.

6. Thou shalt not backslide, nor hinder thy neighbor from making all these insurances, for those who are so improvident as not to insure are those who are most visited with losses; no one pities their condition.

Those that are beaten pay the fine.

7. Thou shalt not search for evasion to get rid of the expense of insurance, for it is low in proportion to thy position; thou canst put by as much as the value of the bottles of wine thou drinkest, and thou wilt then have sufficient for all thy insurance.

The pitcher that goes often to the well must in the end be filled.

8. Thou shalt regard the expense of insurance like the expense of thy meat and drink; and as thou canst not do without these, because thou hast hunger and thirst thou shalt not more hesitate about insurance, because it will give thee security, repose, consolation, and aid.

In thirst and misfortune
A pear in reserve is a pleasure.

9. Thou shal be careful when thou insurest that thou selectest a reliable and safe company and that the agent is an honest one, because in so doing in case of a loss thy money shall not have been paid for nought, and if thou lose thy property and not get thy Insurance thouwill bebepoorer than a church rat.

If thou fallest into poverty
People will care but little for thee.

10. Thou shalt do all thy insurance with Robert Davis, the Conveyancer and Land and Insurance Agent at Flesherton, for—

He represents only the best companies, and
He guards well his patrons' interests.

ROBT. DAVIS,

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Real Estate, Loan, and Estate Agent, Flesherton Branch office, Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, every Thursday.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupulous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.

You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at HOME AGAIN.

DEDICATED TO W. J. McFARLAND, ESQ., ON HIS RETURN FROM EUROPE.

BY W. H. CLARK.

Loved Markdale, thou spot of earth dearest to me,
Thou home of my loved ones, I greet thee with pleasure;
I have longed in my absence, thy spires to see.
Thy memories have yielded me joy without measure.
Thy interests are mine, in the conflicts to come,
I love thee, fair Markdale, because thou art home.

Who then are of the woodman the echoes awoke,
And daily we witnessed the forest receding,
The march tramp of progress was heard in each stroke,
Till the swift locomotive the ox-team succeeding,
The harbinger proved of rich blessings to come,
Which have fell to thy portion, fair Markdale, my home.

Though we bost of no leniage of pure Saxon blood;
Though we point to no castles by Norman erected,
Yet her commerce now flows where the forest once stood;
And surprised at the change a few years have effected:
We gaze at bright visions of ptospects to come;
Yes, Markdale, I love thee, because thou art home.

I have wandered afar, o'er the deep rolling sea;
I have sought distant climes for amusement and pleasure;
But ne'er for one moment forgetful of thee:
Where is all I hold dearest, my best earthly treasure,
When foot-sore and weary, wherever I roam,
In my dreams of the night I see resting at home.

As I ranged o'er fair Erin, my own native isle,
In beauty surpassing the isle's of the ocean.
Though dominant reigns discontentment, the while;
Though thy peace may be marred by internal commotion;
While I trust in thy future, there's bright days to come,
Yet I would not exchange for thee, Markdale, my home.

Mid Britain's vast ruins, whose ivy clad walls
Have for centuries their grand legends been keeping;
Her temples of learning, her abbies and halls,
Where the dust of the great for ages been sleeping.
While I stand neath the arch of St. Paul's mighty dome,
Even there restive memory flies back to my home.

As I pass o'er the channel to bright, sunny France,
And mix in the festive enjoyment of Paris
Where each purpose of life seems its joys to enhance
And its cares, as though never permitted to harrass
While there, amid scenes all enchanting I roam,
Full often my mind wanders back to my home.

Sweet home! There's a charm for the soul in that word,
Which distance but serves to intensify, rather Than 'minish its powers whenever 'tis heard,
Sweet memories redolent of love round it gather,
Whatever our pleasures wherever we roam,
There's nothing so sweet as the memories of home.

Markdale, Sept. 6th, 1881.

VIOLA'S REVENGE.

By the Author of "MY LADY'S SECRET," "A WAIF'S FORTUNES," "THE LADY OF GORMON LEA," &c,

A few interviews with lawyers, and the matter would be sufficiently settled to admit of his return, to explain fully his windfall and to claim her promise to share it. In such a case her engagement to that very cool and matter-of-fact wooer William Burgot would certainly be broken off, whilst the Colonel could hardly be expected to forgive and marry a girl who had played fast and loose with him in so unprincipled a manner.

Between the two stools "Dear Clara" would come to the ground, the affair would be a piquant object of gossip for Herefordshire scandalmongers, and her fall, matrimonially considered, would be about as fatal as that of one "Humpty Dumpty," who had an equally awkward tumble, with results which "all the king's horses and all the king's men" could not rectify.

William Burgot was perhaps the most impatient of them all. He knew, as well as though the fact had been told him in so many words, that the sight of the "beauty-marks" upon his arm had quickened Colonel Pettitt's slumbering recollections.

The Colonel's speech about the "tiger-hunt of Jungapore" proved that he had discovered his host's identity with the real William Burgot's servant. Puzzled at first to account for the Colonel's sudden departure, a casual remark from "dear Clara" that their late guest had been summoned hastily to Italy, confirmed his worst apprehensions. To hunt up evidence which might brand him as an impostor was the nature of Colonel Pettitt's business.

The false William Burgot would have given five years of his life to annihilate time and to secure a union which would not only constitute him the master of "dear Clara's" five thousand pounds, but would make it to the interest of the family generally not to punish him for the fraudulent impersonation, the legal penalty for which he did not know, and concerning which he feared to enquire. So he accepted the suspense, bearing it as best he might. He became feverishly hopeful, as well as feverishly anxious, as the momentous event drew near. The month was almost at an end now; in a few days, he would be safe for Colonel Pettitt had made no sign.

* * * * * * *

It was the day previous to that fixed for the double marriage, and Lord Armidale had ridden over to spend a few hours of it with his beloved. The house was a busy one, and nobody found leisure to attend to him. For twenty minutes he had been cooling his heels in the drawing-room, awaiting her appearance.

What masquerade was this? Into that luxurious apartment stole a beggar-maid, whose tattered habiliments were in ill-keeping with its magnificence—a girl in shabby brown dress, creased with long and careful preservation. He recognized the figure and the robe, and he recalled the scene in which he first saw them—the fierce heat, the intense blue of the sky and of the bay, the shattered column, the headless Apollo, the idle fountain.

"Viola!" he cried wonderingly.

"Yes, I am Viola; and this is the hour of my revenge!" she answered.

He did not understand, save that she was masquerading, and that it behoved him to patiently await an explanation. He had such varied experiences of her moods—he had borne so much from her since the day she consented to become his wife, that, after the first shock of surprise, he was not greatly astonished.

Very calm and strong and grand—a lover of whom a queen might be proud—he looked as he stood before her, awaiting her pleasure.

"My lord," she continued, "when you insulted me years ago and we parted in anger, I vowed to be revenged. To fulfil that vow became the aim of my life. No matter how I hoped to accomplish it. When Duke Burgot died, and William Burgot succeeded to his inheritance, I knew that the way was being made easy. When you and I met face to face, I said to myself that the hour of my revenge was at hand."

She was cruelly pale; her lovely eyes shone with feverish light, her voice trembled with repressed but bitter energy. Lord Armidale began to feel that he stood on the brink of some strange revelation, but he only bowed in token of his attention.

"My plan was very simple—to fascinate you with such poor beauty, wit, and accomplishments as I possessed, to win you back to the old allegiance without visible effort, and most of all, without the old response, and afterwards to reject with scorn and contumely your proffered hand. On the very eve of success I learned from him whom you suppose to be my father that his real name is Charles Singleton, the play-mate, foster-brother, servant, and friend of the dead William Burgot, whose illegitimate child I am."

"Illegitimate!" cried Lord Armidale.

"Even so, my lord. Then I knew that if the imposture were eventually discovered, you would rejoice at your fortunate escape. A better scheme of vengeance occurred to me. It was to accept and marry you, then tell you all the truth and taunt you with your shame."

"Go on—go on," said Lord Armidale, brokenly.

"The project would have succeeded, had not my own firmness given away. My lord, for the second time, I have changed my project. Viola's revenge is now accomplished."

From under the ragged kerchief about her throat she unclasped a chain he had given to her, with a portrait-locket hanging to it. From one of her white fingers she drew the engagement-ring, and added it to the glittering heap. The diamonds flashed back the firelight as she pushed the jewels towards him.

"I release you from our engagement; all is at an end between us. My lord, I am so humble now that I see, even more clearly than you did in the old days, how wide a gulf separates an English peer from a poor Italian beggar-maid, the child of shame."

Her voice broke; her head was bowed; she could not see through the welling tears what infinite compassion and love glorified her companion's noble countenance.

"I have only to ask forgiveness," she went on, after a pause, "before we part for ever, for the great wrong I have done you, so far exceeding that I suffered at your hands. Your goodness, kindness, patient forbearance, have taught me a truth I partly suspected before, that the love I gave you on the Italian hill-slopes is immortal and cannot die. Fierce hatred and the burning desire for vengeance [illegible] but phases of [illegible] [illegible] a blaze of [illegible]"

Blinded by her tears [illegible] see that he [illegible] until her hands were clasped in his and she knew that he had stirred from that attitude of grave attention which he at first assumed.

"Then you love me still, Viola?"

"Love you! Oh, my lord—Claude my beloved, I would I might die for you a thousand deaths! I would to Heaven it were possible I might for ever serve you, be your handmaiden and your slave, though I can never become your wife."

He had drawn her into his embrace. For the first time since their betrothal, the little head fell upon his shoulder and the ripe red lips were all his own. He was whispering to her that by that hour on the morrow priestly blessing would have hallowed their union—that nothing but death should stand between them thenceforward.

CHAPTER XIV., AND LAST.

Church bells were ringing merrily, many-coloured flags streamed from the windows of the houses of the village, and the little station in the hollow was gaily decorated with flowers and evergreens.

"What is the meaning of all this fuss?" asked Colonel Pettitt, alighting from an early train and addressing the enquiry to a porter who touched his cap to him.

"Double wedding, sir. Lord Armidale and Miss Viola—Mr. William Burgot and Miss Dallas."

"What?" almost screamed the Colonel.

"The Squire and Miss Clara Dallas are being married."

With a savage imprecation Colonel Pettitt turned away and went to his old quarters at the inn. More than ever like a stage-Mephistopheles was the Colonel, as he listened to the landlord's corroboration of the tale.

Then he asked for a private room and ordered breakfast. In the bygone times he was wont to inspire the landlord's respect by the nicety of his taste, almost amounting to squeamishness, in matters of eating and drinking. But on this particular morning he made no demand for a bill of fare and answered hastily, "Anything—anything," when they offered him a choice of dishes.

"There is something wrong with the Colonel," commented the landlord to his better half; and his buxom helpmate answered—so many a true word being spoken in jest—

"Poor gentleman; he looks as though he had been crossed in love!"

Colonel Pettitt was not a good man, a pattern man, or a man with chivalrous ideas of honour; but at least he might be accorded this faint meed of praise, that the foolish love of his middle-age was a strong, genuine, unselfish passion, and worthy of a better return.

He saw the folly of it now, as he sat in mine host's sand-strewed parlor and awaited the serving of the meal. The idol he set up in the temple of his heart had fallen from its pedestal and was hopelessly shattered. The sight of the fragments angered him; he could never piece them together again and reinstate it.

Never again could bend the knee at "Dear Clara's" shrine, although he knew full well that a dozen sentences spoken in her ear would induce her to discard the suitor she was marrying in such unseemly haste and implore him, Colonel Pettitt, to pardon her and be reconciled.

No; the tidings of her perfidy had slain his love and awakened a fierce thirst for vengeance. He asked himself whether it did not behove him to stop this marriage, arranged with such guilty precipitation during his brief absence.

He smiled once or twice as he revolved the question; and mine host, encountering his fixed preoccupied stare and his joyless smile, shuddered involuntarily, wondering what made the Colonel look so strange.

There was yet time. He might drive to the Grange, ask to see "dear Clara" or Mrs, Robert, and impart information which would deaden the clangour of the bells and change the merry sound of wedding festivities in to weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

But, instead of taking this course, the Colonel ate a few mouthfuls of breakfast, drank a few glasses of wine, and sauntered down to the church. An evil face, white, hard, and determined, was Colonel Pettitt's as he selected a pew to his liking.

William Burgot perceived it in the midst of the ceremony and dropped the ring he was about to place on his bride's finger. His trembling hands almost refused their task; each moment he expected to hear his accuser's voice forbid the marriage; but he was happily disappointed. He and "dear Clara" and Lord Armidale and Viola were duly joined together in the bonds of Holy Matrimony, whilst the evil face looked on unmoved.

The Colonel joined the group presently, and murmured stereotyped congratulations [illegible]

"Of course you will join us at breakfast?" said William Burgot huskily. [illegible] the Colonel answered grimly that [illegible]

At the breakfast, amid the popping of champagne corks and the sound of merry laughter, he rose to his feet, and an expectant hush fell upon the revellers.

"Madam," said the Colonel sternly, addressing "dear Clara," "permit me to offer my congratulations upon your marriage with a man in every respect worthy of you. I allude to the impostor who has hitherto been known as William Burgot, but whom we may now begin to address as Charles Singleton, and who has no more right to Burgot Grange and to the princely income he derives therefrom than I have.

There was a strange confusion of tongues and an hysterical shriek from Mrs. Robert. "Dear Clara" turned white to the very lips. Had she sold herself for nothing to a man whom she did not love? Had the Colonel suppressed information which might have saved her, in revenge for her faithlessness? She knew now the meaning of his sudden journey to Italy. This secret was the gold mine he thought to develop.

Lord Armidale was rising to his feet, and the confusion of tongues ceased.

"Permit me to say," he observed, "In justice to Mr. Charles Singleton, that he was the deceased William Burgot's foster-brother and friend, that he assumed his name and the guardianship of his daughter, my dear wife, by William Burgot's dying request; and that, although he had certainly no right until to-day, to Burgot Grange and, "he has just acquired such right by his marriage with Miss Clara Dallas, their lawful owner."

"Nonsense!" cried Colonel Pettitt sharply. "The lawful owner is your wife, my lord."

"The lawful owner is my ward, Viola," testified the false William Burgot. "I deceived her once by representing that her father's marriage with her Italian mother was not, by English law, legal; but the statement was untrue. I have been in a manner forced to speak and act falsely; but I am glad to think that nobody has really suffered in consequence."

"Except one, who richly deserves her punishment—Clara Singleton, your wife!" growled the Colonel vindictively.

But "dear Clara" had fainted.

"Dear Clara" and Charles Singleton are making the best of their loveless union, living on the interest of Charles Singleton's little fortune, eked out by an allowance from Lord Armidale. Strange to say, Mrs. Robert has married Colonel Pettitt, and report says they are very happy. Be that as it may, there is one couple about whose wedded bliss there can be no shade of doubt; Lord and Lady Armidale bless daily the joyful consummation of "VIOLA'S REVENGE."

IS IT POSSIBLE,—That a remedy made of of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do? It must be, for when old and young, rich and poor, Pastor and Doctor, Lawyer and Editor, all testify to having been cured by them, we must believe and doubt no longer.—Post.

A CURIOUS PERSON.

A curious person died reciently in Paris at the age of 72 years, the Count Napoleon Bertrand, son of the companion of Napelon I. at St. Helena. The Count every year used to hire a room in a hotel and go to bed for three months, after having given orders for food to be brought to him once a day and not a word be spoken by the servent. He was asleep during the seige of Paris. One day the bread was so abominable that he flew into a rage and forced the waiter to tell him the reason was that the city was besieged by the Prussians. Count Betrand was stupefield for a moment. At last he got up and wondered about the hotel for a time, saying to himself, "Paris besieged! besieged! what ought a Bertrand to do?" And after a few minutes' reflection, he said: I will go to bed." And he went to bed and slept out the siege.

THE SADDEST OF SAD SIGHTS,—The grey hairs of age being brought with sorrow to the grave is now, we are glad to think, becoming rarer every year as the use of Cingalese Hair Restorer becomes more general. By its use the scanty locks of age once more resume their former color and the hair becomes thick and luxuriant as ever; with its aid we can now defy the change of years, resting assured that no Grey Hair at any rate will come to sadden us. SCHNEIDER'S TOMATOES.

Schneider is very fond of tomatoes. Schnider has a friend in the country who raises "garden sass and sich." Schnider had an invitation to visit his friend last week, and regale himself on his favorite vegetable. His friend Peifer being busy negotiating with a city produce dealer, on his arrival, Schneider thought he would take a stroll in the garden and see some of his favorites in their prestine beauty. We will let him tell the rest of his story in his own language.

"Vell, I valks about a leetle vhile roundt vhen I see some of dose dermatters vat vas so red und nice as I nefer did see any more und I dinks I vilt put myself out side bout a gouple ov dem, shust to gif me a leetle appetite for dinner. THE YANKEE AND THE DRUGGIST

"Be you the drugger?"

"Well, I s'pose so; I sell drugs."

"Wall, have you got any of this sintin' stuff as the gals put on their hanke' chers?"

"Oh yes," replied the druggist.

"Wall our gal's gwine to be married, and she gin me a quarter and told me to invest the hull 'mount in scentin' stuff, so's to make her sweet, if I could find some to suit; so if you've a mind I'll just smell round."

"The Yankee smelled round without being suited, until the druggist got tired of him and taking down a bottle of hartshorn, said:

"I've got a bottle of scentin' stuff that will suit you. A single drop on a handkerchief will stay for weeks, and you can't wash it out; but to get the strength of it, you must take a good smell."

"The hartshorn knocked the Yankee down. Do you suppose he got up and smelt again. Not he; but rolling up his sleeves, he said:

"You made me smell that everlasting stuff, mister and now I'll make you smell my fist!"

NOTHING MEAN ABOUT THEM

A gentleman who was yesterday standing in front of the Opera House, was approached by a tramp who appeared to have tears in his eyes as he said:

"Say, mister, my wife is dying, an' I want to get twenty-five cents to buy some medicine."

Before any answer could be made a second tramp came from the other direction and haulted and asked:

"Say, mister, can't you lend me a quarter? I've got to get something for my cough or I'll be dead before the snow flies."

"Here you are—one wants a quarter to save his dying wife, and the other wants a quarter to cure his cough. Now what shall I do about it?"

"Is your cough very bad?" asked tramp No. 1 of No 2.

"T-terrible!" coughed No. 2 in reply.

"Well, There's nothing mean about me," continued No. 1. "This is my second wife, and no great shakes at that, and maybe the medicine wouldn't help her any. I'll wave all claim and he may hand you the quarter."

"Oh, I c-couldn't t-think of it," coughed the other. "Maybe I'll get over this, while your p-poor wife certainly needs medicine."

"Well, here's a quarter for each of you," said the citizen as he witnessed their unselfishness, and while he hastened on the next corner to tell a friend that the world was growing better the philanthropists halted on one block the other way to play pigeon-hole for the drinks.—M Quad.

—[§||§]—

A considerate daughter: "I don't see how I'd got along without Mary, nohow," Mrs. Blucher observed, pausing to wipe the perspiration from her aged features and put another ladle of soft soap into the steaming suds, while her daughter's voice at the piano could be distinctly recognized floating out from the adjoining parlor. "I don't see how I'd get along without that gal nohow. Alays on them days when I have the tiringest work she just picks out her nicest pieces like 'Sweet rest by-and by,' and 'Mother's growing old,' and sing 'em for me afore she gets out on the lawn to play croquet with the other young folk. 'Taint every gal as ud be so thoughtful, I kin tell you. Now, most of 'em would jest bang away with 'Jordan is a hard road to travel' or 'Whoop 'em up, Eliza Jane,' but she ain't none of that sort. She's a pile o' comfort to me—a pile o' comfort;" and Mrs. Blucher fanned herself vigorously with her soiled apron, preparatory to running the clothes through the second water

A NEIGHBORLY FAMILY

A family from down in Indiana moved into a house on Second avenue last week, and before night had borrowed tea, sugar, eggs, milk, and kerosene from as many different neighbors. After three or four days the new family ceased to borrow promiscuously, and settled down on one particular neighbor. At an early hour in the morning a small boy appeared and said.

"Say, we are out of tacks and want to put down our carpet. Ma wants to know if she can borrow a few?"

A hunt was made and the request granted, but in ten minutes the boy returned and said:

"Say, we've mislaid our tack-hammer, and ma wants to borrow yours."

He got it, and this time it was twenty minutes before he returned and said:

"Say, ma's pulled all her teeth out pulling at that carpet. She wants to know if you won't lend her one of your boys?"

One of the boys was sent over, but it was a very obstinate carpet, and back came the boy with:

"Say ain't your husband home?"

"Yes; what do you want?"

"Well ma's mislaid her husband somewhere, and she wants to borrow yours to pull one end of that carpet through two doors and across a hall."

The line had to be fixed somewhere and it was fixed here.—Detroit News.

OUR IMPROVEMENTS.

Of the many improvements that have been made in our town during the season, there is none more noticeable than the block erected by Messrs. Reid & McDougall, the buildings being connected. The site commands the best business portion of the town, and in fact, is a great feature in the ornamentation for which our town has justly become celebrated. The westerly part, comprising two store buildings, with a frontage of eighty feet, and it is to be regretted that Mr. McDougall did not make that portion of his building correspond with that of Mr. Reid in the fourth story. However, the extra cornishings of the windows of McDougall's share of the block will redeem any faults there may be in the "upperstory."

A REAL NECESSITY.

We presume there is hardly a lady to be found in our broad land who, if she does not already possess a sewing machine, expects some day to become the owner of one.

The household of a young wife is now considered incomplete without a sewing machine.

Next to her lover the thought uppermost in the mind of the maiden just blooming into womanhood is a sewing machine.

When asked by her parents or affianced what her Christmas or birthday present shall be, the answer in a majority of cases is, "A sewing machine."

But after the mind has been fully made up to purchase one of these indispensable article, the question arises as to what kind of a machine to buy.

It should be so simple constructed that the most inexperienced can successfully operate it.

The other points mainly to be considered and which are the most desirable, are durability, rapidity, capacity for work ease of operation, regularity of motion, uniformity of tension and silence while in operation.

Of all the various machines now up on the market, the "Light Running New Home" fills the above requirements most satisfactory.

It it is said to combine the good points of all other sewing machines, and, in addition, has many new improvements and labor saving devices.

The price is no higher than that of other machines, and, every lady who is the happy possessor of one may rest assured she has indeed a treasure.

All who send for the company's new illustrated catalogue and enclose their advertisement (print on another page), will recieve a set of fancy adv. novelties of value of those collecting cards, &c. Their address is, JOHNSON, CLARK & CO., 30 Union Square, New York.

BUSH FIRES.

The amount of damage done this season by bush fires, not only in Canada, but in portions of the United States also, is beyond computation.

In many parts of Ontario fires have been raging for the past month or six weeks. In the County of Frontenac they are still burning with unabated fury, destroying timber, root crops, barns, houses, and, in fact, everything that comes in its way, and in some places the ground is said to be burning to the depth of four feet.

In our own County, in the vicinity of Owen Sound and adjoining Townships, the fire has gained increased vigor from the continued drought, and innumerable barns, houses, fences, &c., have fallen an easy prey to the fell destroyer. The smoke arising therefrom, although not quite stopping navigation, has greatly impeded it.

In the Muskoka District, and the Counties of Oxfork, Huron, Bruce and Perth, wide-spread damage has been done. In the latter county the accounts are heart-rending in the extreme, some families being utterly ruined. Traffic on the Stratford and Huron Railway had to be suspended for a time; and it is said that unless rain soon falls that that portion of the county in which the fires exist, will be totally devastated.

In the Ottawa Valley the fires have done great damage; many farmers losing everything they had, even to their live stock, and in some cases narrowly escaped with their lives.

In the State of Michigan the damage is even more deplorable. Not only were barns, houses, nine towns and villages swept away by the devouring element, but over 500 lives have been lost. In many instances whole families have been utterly exterminated.

The Mayor of Port Huron has appealed to the Canadian people for help for the sufferers in the following despatch sent to the leading newspapers:

AN APPEAL TO CANADIAN CHARITY.

PORT HURON, Sept. 9.—Our country has been devastated by fire. The suffering is beyond description; people are in a starving condition. Will the seed wheat, provisions, and clothing. Orders have been received from the Secretary of the Treasury that all goods for this purpose will pass free of duty.

(Signed) E. C. CARLETON, Mayor.

JOTTINGS FROM MAXWELL.

From our own Correspondent.

Weather cool.

Heavy rain fell here Saturday night

Several in our midst have scarcely recovered from the fright occasioned by the great smoke of Monday week. We fancy they felt a "little" unprepared.

Threshing is now the order of the day, and the yield seems to be average if not above.

Numbers are leaving for the Exhibition in Toronto, or to make an Exhibition of themselves we hardly know which.

According to the opinions of men who should know, we have reason to expect the much talk of "Credit Valley R. R. extension," make its way through our village at an early date.

The Maxwell Literary and Debating Society resumed last Friday evening. Little else than general business was attended to, but the programme for next Friday promises to be very good. We wish it success.

This Society has been steadily improving since its organization in January last, and this season bids fair to excel the last.

KIMBERLEY.

Village unusually quiet this week; about the only thing to relieve the monotony was a dog fight, a boy on one side and a man and his wife on the other. The boy's dog being a better fighter the old man and woman pitched in to the boy and dog, whereupon the boy gave the old pair the go-by and showed them his heels and came in the easiest of winners by about, well say—two lengths.

Some person put fire at the base of the rock on the east mountain on Saturday night and its reflection presented a most magnificent sight as seen from the valley.

Since the excitement about a certain newspaper man committing matrimony, we have have not heard anything about pan-cake batter nor fishery inspector.

Petty thieving seems to be in vogue just now. Two of our villagers assert that their milk rooms have been visited; from one butter was stolen and milk from the other. I have heard one man say that they had better not disturb his domestic peace or he will present them with a longing for a surgeon, which we hope he will if they visit him.

There is a good deal of sickness here just now, nearly all being dysentry.

The Dundalk HERALD is a decided success, a few copies have been returned, and a greater number of names have been added to the list of subscribers. Those to whom it was sent are highly pleased with it and the great majority have become bona-fide subscribers so that we have now over 400 subscribers to the HERALD. We invite correspondents from any subscriber an local matters. You all have a chance to make the HERALD still more interesting. When writing for the paper write "printers copy" on the envelope and leave it open and it will only cost one cent postage. Notice of marriages free—send them along, births and deaths also free, together, with all matters not intended for the pecuniary benefit of any individual.

QUEEN'S VALLEY.

We are pleased to notice the improvements going on in the valley. There is a Gristing Mill, Saw Mill, Factory, General Store, Wagon Shop, Blacksmith Shop, Temperance Hotel, Post Office, and several other places of business. We also noticed a new survey of village lots. Such are the improvements made during the last two or three years.

The crops have been good throughout that section this year and the people are hopeful.

The following is the honor roll for the above school for August, 1881.

TRAVERSTON CORRESPONDENCE.

We understand Mr. Chas. Kennedy of the Traverston Woollen Mills, who lately received injuries from an accident while adjusting part of the machinery, is now on a fair way of recovery. We hope friend Charles will soon be able to resume his particular duties, as the loss must be considerable to the firm at this busy season of the year. There are far more orders for yarn than can be supplied, and altogether business at the Traverston Woollen Factory has been quite brisk this year.

EUPHRASIA COUNCIL.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment, on the 29th of August, 1881. Members all present.

Minutes of last session of Council read and confirmed.

Notice from Collingwood Township Council laid before Council, stating [illegible] Mr. Fleming referee on union school business.

A claim was made by a Mr. McArthur for damages to a buggy on 7th line. It was however made to appear that said gentleman must have driven too near the side of the road. The matter was laid aside.

The Treasurer was ordered to remit to John Rutherford, Esq., Owen Sound, $37.00, payment for stationery and Voters' List.

By-law No. 306 was passed, levying School Rates for the current year.

On petition of John White and others, for cutting rock at lot 30, 11th line, the Council resolved to examine the matter minutely, and to carry out the prayer of said petition if they deemed it reasonable and just, taking into account the present state of finances of Township.

Thomas Jordan was appointed collector in the 5 easterly concession, at a salary of $45.00; and Andrew T. Buchanan in the 7 westerly concessions at a salary of $55.00, and By-law passed accordingly.

By-law No. 309, for carrying out the provisions of the County Council establishing a fair in Rocklyn, was carried through the different stages and passed.

The Reeves orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz.: To J. Farewell, for advertising Court of Revision, $3.36; publishing Auditors' Report, $12.00; publishing adjourned meeting of Court of Revision, $2.00; Printing 500 copies of Minutes of Council and Auditors' Report for 1880, containing 44 pages printed matter, $44.00. Isaac Garrett, $5.00 for cleaning hall, stove pipes, windows, &c. Robt. Dunlop, $20 for transcribing and prepairing for publication Minutes of Council, 1880, $20.00; for preparing Voters' List, &c., $25.00. Jesten Badgero, $3.10, for repairs to plough broken while performing statute labor, being certified to by Henry White, pathmaster. Thomas Reid, $146.50, for road work, ditching.—John Davis, $1 55, damage to a waggon. Robert Hetherington, $57.00, for repairing Town Hall. William Warner, $19.00, for work on 3 & 4 side road, con. 7.

The Council adjourned until the last Saturnay in September.

The latest Venezuelan Army List contains the names of 32,222 Generals. As the regular army of the republic consists of exactly 12,000 men, each, Venezeulan soldier may count upon three generals to convey to him, individually, his instructions in the field.

A convention has been concluded between Greece and France, subject to the confirmation of the French Chamber, by which France is authorized to explore and excavate the sites of Delphi upon the same terms as the German excavations were carried out at Olympia.

A bogus Countess, with a "secretary" and retinue, has lately gone through a number of Vienna tradesmen. She was, however, arrested when about to leave her swell hotel, in man's attire, by a hotel porter, and Countess and suite are among the most fashionable arrivals at the city prison.

Children are wonderful treasure trovers. They are always tumbling over caskets and other valuable deposits. The other day some urchins playing on the slope of the Bugberg, at Weissdorf, scraped up a gilded iron casket. On being forced open it was found filled with pearls and stones, rings, gold and silver ornaments, gold and silver coins, dated 1517, 1612 and 1624.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Your correspondent "M" concludes he cannot go with me on whiskey. I didn't ask him to have anything to do with whiskey. My suggestion was for every ten cents spent on treating, another should be given to the tavern keeper as a sort of Church Treasurer. Many a decent man spends numerous ten cents in grog, and still continues a worthy member of the church. If a tavern keeper can be a church member, as many of them are, or can be, what is to hinder them acting as Church Treasurers in the way proposed? If the selling of whiskey, or the drinking of whiskey in a moderate way is no bar to church fellowship, how should there be any bar to receiving any money collected in the manner referred to? Do we ever hear of any church refusing the offerings of those who sell liquor or drink it? An authority which a great many believe in, avers that > "Freedom and whiskey gang the gither, > Tak' aff your dram."

Religion and freedom usually go together and if whiskey cannot go hand in hand with them why does not the church say so? "M" says in effect "religion and whiskey cannot go hand in hand." The Church in effect says they can. If "M" is right he has some reason for objection to my modest proposition. If the church is right I do not see the shadow of ground against establishing this new class of Church Treasurer either in the interests of the Church or those of

FAIR PLAY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I suggested lately an unencumbered plan for raising the needful for religions purposes and here I have "M" last week coming down upon me like an avalanche, as if a State Church was already looming in the distance. There might be a great many worse things than a State Church. But a [illegible] need not necessarily follow the taxing by the Church of its members. "M" traces taxation up to a church receiving its laws, rites and ceremonies from Blake and Company. It is rather to be supposed that Blake & Co. have their hands full just at present. Be that as it may, "M" evidently argues on the hypothesis of history identically repeating itself. It often does so. In this case, however, it cannot, as the church has never been known hitherto voluntarily to go to the assessment roll and clap on a tax on each member and afterwards become a State Church. Let "M" read up the history of State Churches and he will find that it was through superstition and not by taxation that the State at first enthralled the Churches. Afterwards it may have come to pass that the State said, "As we support, therefore we legislate for you." But in the first instance the State captured the church for the sake of the support the church would give to the State and not that the State should support the church. Hence whatever evils have flowed from State Churches. But is it not possible for such a scheme of taxation as I indicated being carried out without bringing the church under State control in regard to its moral and religious government? We are said to have no State Churches now on this Continent, and yet all our denominations have to submit more or less to legislation in a corporate sense so far as their real estate is concerned. Well, does not the most of the pecuniary difficulties of our religious bodies consist in their trying to raise the needful to pay for this real estate? Where then would be the harm in receiving permission from the legislature to tax its own membership. The one piece of legislature would no more than the other make a State Church out of any denomination, But "M" is afraid that a regular taxation system would cause many to fling churches and religion overboard, and yet "M" has been very ably arguing throughout all his correspondence in the STANDARD that the world and the church are too much mixed. In this I cordially agree with him and am therefore all the more astonished that so acute an observer as "M" should reject a scheme which by his own admission would so much serve to separate the world from the church. Therefore repeat, "tax the adjuncts but leave the gospel free. The adjuncts are already subject to legislation, and the Church is not considered a State Church. Neither would permission from the legislature to clap on a tax on church members for payment of these adjuncts make a State Church of it. "M" goes on to speak of the enormous evils of a State Church, and appears to think it nothing but a union of the world, the devil and the flesh, and yet he cannot agree with the simple tax test whereby he would get rid of what he very properly describes as "the loose fish who swim in shoals," in the present no-State Church. In a critical historical disquisition "M" then delivers some knocks on our Episcopal friends, and closes with wiping out your correspondent "Fair Play" in a whiskey discussion, which, however, is rather out of my line, as, like Topsy's Irishman, I can only swallow whiskey when there is no potheen handy.

Yours truly,

TAXARIOUS.

The steamer "Columbia" of the North-eastern line, foundered off Frankfort, Mich., and fifteen lives were lost, most of whom were residents of Collingwood.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—I was amused with the communication of "Tamas Tickle" which appeared in a late issue of your valuable paper.

"Tamas" does not seem to have studied music all his life; I can almost imagine that he is in blissful ignorance of the various Scales, Keys, and Moods made use of in the commonest tunes he hears sung, and I believe he would as soon set himself to measure the distance from Markdale to "John O'Groat's" as he would to ascertain the distance of a "minor third."

As Tamas seems to be a little "mixed" about Tunes, I think the best way to bring him to his senses will be to ask him what sort of tunes his father made of at family worship; or what sort of tunes they were which he might hear ascending from nearly every hearth as he took a stroll through the less frequented streets of his native Town on a Sabbath evening between eight and nine o'clock; or if he does know anything about music, if he ever joined in Public Worship when the Precentor sung "New London" to the Psalm beginning "O Thou my soul bless God the Lord," or "Redemption" to the paraphrase "'Tis finished was his latest voice," or Invocation to the verses beginning "O send Thy light forth, and thy truth," or Elgin to the beautiful paraphrase "The wretched prodigal behold, in misery lying low," or Coleshill to the touching words "Such pity as a Father hath unto his children dear," and if he has done so, I would like to know how he felt as these tunes, and others equally grand, were sung with a solemnity and earnestness befitting the occasion; and sung too, in regard to pitch and time so that all, from the oldest to the youngest, could join in the service, and how he feels now, when the same words are sung to Americanized tunes, and pitched so high that only a few in a congregation can even "screech" out the highest notes; and in break-neck haste, so that articulation is almost impossible. But if Tamas is not acquainted with such tunes as I have named, nor with the Psalms and Hymns I have referred to, which is hardly possible in a Scotsman, I would refer him to his National Poet, Robbie Burns, with whose writings and their full meaning no doubt Tamas is at home. He will find in the "Cottar's Saturday night," the following lines "And let us worship God;" he says with solemn air:

> "They chant their artless notes in simple guise,
> They tune their hearts by far the noblest aim;
> Perhaps Dundee's wild warbling measures rise,
> Or plaintive Martyrs worthy of the name.
> Or noble Elgin beats the Heaven-ward flame,
> The sweetest far of Scotia's holy lays,
> Compared with these Italian trills are tame.
> The tickled ear no heartfelt raptures raise;
> Nae unison hae they with our Creator's praise."

Yes, Mr. Editor, these, and such as these, are the tunes and songs that lighted up the family altar, and kept the incense burning bright—that cheered the persecuted saints in caves, in clefts of the rock, on the rugged mountain side, or at the stake among burning faggots, when the sword of the persecutor was ever ready to shed their blood; they cheered the Christian pilgrim then, and I would ask Tamas would they not do the same now if as fervently and reverently engaged in? I think I hear him say "Amen, so let it be." Tamas says, "If we can mak' organs to dae the wark better than the organs made by the Almichty, I dinna see for why we shouldna use them."

Whenever Tamas conscientiously says that "we can"—that the thing formed can say to Him that formed it, "Why hast thou made me thus?" Then I will say with him "use an organ;" till then I am content to praise with the "calves of my lips." I may here say that the "Dundee" referred to by the Poet is not the tune called by this name in American publications the right name of the tune there called "Dundee" is French, "French" is a major, while the real "Dundee" is a minor.

M.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR—I noticed a short time since, that the Editor of the Advance held up his hands in holy horror because a young man in your Village dressed himself in women's clothes and played some antics on the street. To this I have no objection; but would like to ask this highly virtuous young man why he omitted to notice the extremely disgraceful and immoral actions of some of the fast youths of this Village and a certain tramp and his wife?

Yours, &c.,

Dr. Carson never claimed for his Stomach and Constipation Bitters any MIRACULOUS POWER OF HEALING, but with the quiet consciousness of their medicinal virtues he prescribes them to all those who suffer from derangement of the Stomach, Bowels Liver and Kidneys. MR. WM. MILILGAN lost a span of horses last week in the following manner:—As far as we can learn, Mr. M. runs a threshing machine, and had his horses in a stable together with those of his partner; some of the horses became untied during the night and got kicking, breaking a leg of each of Milligan's horses. The loss is a very serious one to Mr. M., who is ill able bear it.

DUNDALK.

From our own Correspondent.

EVERY train appeared to be loaded with passengers for the Exhibition, during each day this week.

WE notice Peter McGregor is completing his residence with brick veneering. When complete it will be very handsome.

THE broad guage railway track crossed over Main street on Monday, at one o'clock p.m., with a gang of eighteen men, destined for Owen Sound.

R. J. DOYLE'S Patent Fruit Barrel, manufactured in Dundalk, is exhibited at the Industrial Exhibition, of which we will notice more particularly at some future date.

H. GRAHAM'S sale, as announced in the HERALD, is progressing favorably, a large amount of goods being sold daily. Call and get some of the bargains.

APPLE stealing from the orchards is becoming the custom among the young folks. Remember, boys, you might as well steal a man's money as his apples, it is the same crime in the eyes of the law.

GRAIN is now coming to market freely. The first load of oats was bought last week by Mr. Hewetson, at 34c. per bushel. The first load of spring wheat, the property of Mr. Wm. Hope, of Melancthon, was purchased by Mr. Duncan. Dundalk promises to be a good market this season.

EUGENIA AND QUEEN'S VALLEY.

We once had the impression, that Flesherton would eventually have a spur line of Railway, extended from Flesherton Station on through to Eugenia and the Queen's Valley in the township of Euphrasia, but having taking a moonlight drive through Flesherton, Eugenia, and the Valley and from thence to Thornbury. We venture to say that no Railway will pass through that section the next fifty years.

It is the highest, lowest, and roughest roads that we have travelled on in our rambles through the County of Grey, we should be sory that the people of Flesherton should pillow themselves up with the idea, that they will have a spur line or any other line of Railway pass up through the rough hilly section of country.

RAMBLER.

HAVE YOU TRIED IT?

If so you can testify to its marvellous powers of healing and recommend it to your friends. We refer to Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, the grand specific for all summer complaints, diarrhœa, cholera morbus, dysentery, cramps, cholic, sickness of the stomach and bowel complaints of infants or adults. Let its merits be known to all who have not used it.

REMINISCENCES OF A TRIP FROM OWEN SOUND TO SAULT STE MARIE.

RYDAL BANK Sept. 3rd. 1881.—Resuming our journey from Little Current we sail among numerous Islands to Mudge Bay, a distance of thirty miles. On the way we pass LaCloche, a Hudson Bay post on the north shore. It has a store owned by the company, who trades with Indians, Mudge Bay is owned chiefly by R. Henry, who has extensive pine limits there. His saw mill is half a mile from the beach, and the lumber is run from the mill to the shore in a shde. A good tract of land lies south of Mudge Bay; but it is chiefly in the grasp of this magnate. We sail northward from here to Spanish River, twenty miles distant. Before entering the river the boat passes through a channel so narrow that one could almost jump on shore on either side. This place is controlled by Chaffey Bros., Pine, nothing but pine supports this place. The population is half breeds who work in the mill and pick blue berries, and make sugar. The Syndicate's line is settled this far, and work will be commenced shortly. Twenty miles to the south brings us to Gore Bay on Manitoulin. It has the best hotel in eastern Algoma. It does a thriving business with tourists, about twenty American people were, at the time of our visit, spending apleasent time there. Gore Bay is supported by the farming community and lake travel. Forty-five miles more brings us to Meldrum Bay on Manitoulin, but it is in the night and I can give little information. Twelve miles brings us to Cockburn Island. It is about nine by sixteen miles in size, or contains abont a township and a half. The land is excellent, so we have been told by judges, but it labors under the "timber grievance." Let me explain this, a company has the exclusive right to cut and ship timber anywhere and everywhere on the Island whether the land is owned by settlers or government. This gives the settler no chance to save timber. He can cut it for his own use or in a fallow, bet he can not sell any, but the licensee can cut and ship as long as the land is not deeded. A settler cannot get his deed until his conditions of three years settlement are complied with, in the meantime the timber is cut. This question has two sides however, and I will consider it at some future time.

THE BEST REMEDY FOR Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

THE TEN Insurance Commandments.

1. Thou shalt insure thy real and personal estate and all that thou hast against fire, for—

Defending thyself from misfortune until old age,
Thy happiness shall equal thy wisdom.

2. Thou shalt not insure more than thou dost possess, for insurance is a business wherein thou canst not make money. This is simply thy duty in order to preserve what thou hast acquired.

Preserve that which thou shalt acqure,
Whoso is prudent guardeth his goods.

3. Thou shalt not insure less than thou dost possess—for what thou dost not insure, will not be paid in case of loss.

Though poverty is not a vice
To lose all is not a pleasure.

4. Thou shalt not make excessive declarations of value respecting thy property in case of fire; but thou shall state truly that which belongs to thee, that thou mayest not have a lawsuit or gain a bad reputation

As we make our bed so must we lie.

5. Thou shalt also exhort thy neighbors, thy friends, and thy relations to insure themselves, that they may escape loss, and that poverty through a loss by fire be not laid to thy charge.

That which comes by the flute goes by the drum.

6. Thou shalt not backslide, nor hinder thy neighbor from making all these insurances, for those who are so improvident as not to insure are those who are most visited with losses; no one pities their condition.

Those that are beaten pay the fine.

7. Thou shalt not search for evasion to get rid of the expense of insurance, for it is low in proportion to thy position; thou canst put by as much as the value of the bottles of wine thou drinkest, and thou wilt then have sufficient for all thy insurance.

The pitcher that goes often to the well must in the end be filled.

8. Thou shalt regard the expense of insurance like the expense of thy meat and drink; and as thou canst not do without these, because thou hast hunger and thirst thou shalt not more hesitate about insurance, because it will give thee security, repose, consolation, and aid.

In thirst and misfortune
A pear in reserve is a pleasure.

9. Thou shal be careful when thou insurest that thou selectest a reliable and safe company and that the agent is an honest one, because in so doing in case of a loss thy money shall not have been paid for nought, and if thou lose thy property and not get thy Insurance thou will be poorer than a church rat.

If thou fallest into poverty
People will care but little for thee.

10. Thou shalt do all thy insurance with Robert Davis, the Conveyancer and Land and Insurance Agent at Flesherton, for—

He represents only the best companies, and
He guards well his patrons' interests.

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Real Estate, Loan, and Estate Agent, Flesherton Branch office, Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, every Thursday.

SUGGESTIONS OF AND FOR THE SEASONS.

—:o:—

(From the American Agriculturist for Sep. 1)

—:o:—

THE leading farm work for September, in many parts of the United States, is the sowing of the fall crops. This involves putting the soil in thorough readiness, and the selection, and the sowing of the seed. There are a number of essentials in the proper preparation of the seed bed, all of which should obtain in every field devoted to a grain crop. The soil should be rich, either by the accumulated fertility of long years of undisturbed vegetation—the virgin soil, or made so by the addition of a fertilizer in the form of barn-yard dung or the so-called "chemical manures." Of these two, that made in the barn-yard and stable is to be the first chosen, and the superphosphates and other "salts" only used as a supplement to the barn-yard manure, or in cases where the latter is not to be obtained. Next to richness should come a fine tilth. This requires that the soil be well plowed in a thorough manner, and afterwards stirred in a thorough manner with a harrow or some other cultivator—in fact with any implement, until the lumps are reduced, and the whole soil is in a fine mellow state. The importance of the mellowness of the soil for all seeds cannot be too strictly insisted upon, as without it the seeds do not come into intimate contact with the particles of earth, and therefore cannot make a good start, and many of them will not grow at all. With a good supply of plant food, in a condition to be readily taken up by the young plants, the next thing is to select the seed, and sow it properly. To put the matter of selection in a nutshell—sow the best seed to be found, even if it costs double that of the ordinary sort. When the fact becomes more thoroughly known that of two kinds of grain, for example, under identical conditions, one will yield twice as much as the other, more attention will be given to a proper selection of seed. It is not for us to say which variety of wheat or other grain is the best; that depends upon local circumstances and conditions, and each farmer must, after careful study, decide for himself. The "Clawson" wheat is at present taking a high rank for yield and quality in many localities. It may not be the best for all places. Were it not for the Hessian Fly, early sowing of wheat should be recommended in all cases. Late sowing is a disadvantage in itself, as the plants make a smaller growth before winter sets in. The richer the soil the later the sowing may be done with safety.

CHOLERA INFANTUM.

That terrible scourge among children may be speedily cured by Dr. Fowlers Extract of Wild Strawberry. All forms of bowel complaints, nausea and vomiting, from an ordinary

PLOWING AND PULVERIZING

Our first plowing, some fifty years ago, was done with a wooden mould-board. Then came in the wrough iron mould board, hammered out by a blacksmith. About forty years ago the introduction of the cast iron mould board, with replaceable point, caused no little excitement among formers, as they could be produced so much more cheaply than wrought-iron, and being harder they wore longer, But on our stony farms the gain was partly counter-balanced by the breaking of the "points," and often of the "land side" and even mould-board itself. A few years later the steel mould-board and points came into use, and subsequently the chilled iron plows. But during all these fiftyyears of improvement, and from time immemorial before that, the chief ends aimed at have been the perfecting of the old instrument, in form, to meterial in the frame, in coulters, guiding wheel, etc. The principal has been the same, viz., the cutting off of a furrow slice and inverting it more or less perfectly.

But there has all the while been the feeling that Jethro Tull was right in claiming that thorough pulverizing the soil was the great requesite of cultivation. And to secure this we have had a succession of implements devised, as cultivators, rotary diggers, rotary harrows, etc. Most of them have been valuable so far as they have helped towards dividing the soil, so as to provide a finer seed bed. But we are inclined to believe that Charles E. Sackett has now made such modifications and additions to the comon plwo as to amount to a radical and most valuable change in its mode in operation and in the desirable results produced. Here is a general idea of it; First a surface plow which is readily and quickly adjusted to cut off two, three, or four inches in depth of the soil, and turn it well over into the bottom of the previous furrow. Following this, upon the same bearer or frame, is another plow, adjustable to to take up a sub furrow of any desired depth. But this second, or sub-slice, is not merly turned over in a mass upon the top of the first one with only such breaking as the lifting and turning over will secure. Quite different. Upon the frame is an open work wrought iron wheel or cylinder, say 40 inches in diameter, which follows upon and smooths down in part the first turned slice of land, with its grass stubble, weeds, etc. The second furrow is thrown into this revolving wheel, and carried round and round on its inside, among its teeth, and against open-work bars on the rim and outer side, and it is so broken and pulverized it drops out upon the buried sod or surface furrow. The result is, that the soil is pulverized quite as much as it could be done with harrow and roller, and without any tramping and packing by teams; it is left light and fine and in excellent condition for receiving seed. There is also provision for attatching both seed drill and fertiliver distributor. In brief, at one operation the ground is plowed, finally divided; sod, stubble etc, buried, and seed sown. There are several simple, ingenious devices for raising and lowering the plows and wheels, for various depths, for turning at the side of the field, for self-transporting, etc., etc., that would need engravings and lengthy descriptions to expiain them fully.—American Agriculturist for September.

THE THOUSAND ISLANDS.

In a beautifully illustrated article in Harper's Monthly for September 2nd on the Thousand Islands the following about Carleton and Grenadier Islands will be interesting to our readers:—Below Cape Vincent is Carleton Island, where a number of stone chimneys atrtact the attention. These are ruins of a fort built by the British troops during the revolution. The stone parapet and the ditch cut in the limestone rock still mark the outline of the fort. Three more historic incidents of minor interest are connected with these Islands. Grenadiar Island, opposite Alexandria Bay became, during the war of 1812, a refuge in storm for the unlucky expedition fitted out at Saskett's Harbour under General Wilkinson, for the proposed capture of Montreal. It was an ill-advised affair. The expidition was storm stayed on Grenadier some time, and finally proceeded down the river to Crysler's farm, near the Long Sault, where the undertaking terminated with the defeat of the American army. The guide books point out the battle ground, which may be seen from the steamer's deck The second was the war of Grindstone Island, a boundary dispute in 1823, at which time an earth work, yet visable, was thrown out of that island, and the third was theburning of the Canadian steamer Sir Robert Peel in 1838 by Bill Johnson and a lot of "patriots." Everybody who comes here must hear this story, with all its apocryphal incidents, and take a look at the dock on Wells' Island, where the vessel was burned—and therefore I forbear. Many tourists rushed through the Thousand Islands, in true American style, on a big steamer, drop the morning paper or the latest novel just long enough to glance over the rail at a pretty vista of channel or a cosy island home, and imagine they have seen the Thousand Islands. Just so the swift Yankee spends fifteen mortal minutes by the watch in "doing" the Louvre, or St. Peter's, or the galleries of Munich. Whoever does that loses one of the most inspiring opportunities of a lifetime. There is only one such archipelago in the world, and no man looking for the gems of nature's handiwork can afford to sail through the Thousand Islands and not know what they are.

THE OLD RELIABLE.

The remedy that has stood the test of time is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Almost infalliable to cure dysentery, cholera morbus, and all manner of fluxes, cholic cramp, cholera infantum, and every form of summer complaints.

—:o:—

CO-OPERATION OF THE WIFE.—No man ever prospered in the world without the co-operation of his wife. If she unites in mutural endeavors, or rewards his labor with an endearing, smile, with what confidence will he resort to his daily toil, meet difficulty and encounter danger, if he knows that he is not spending his strength in vain, but that his labor will be rewarded by the sweetness of home! Solitude and disappointment enter the history of every man's life, and he is only half provided for his voyage who finds but an associate for his happy hours, while for his months of darkness and distress no sympathising partener is prepared.

AROUND THE WORLD.

A volcano has been discovered in Idaho.

A new ironclad of the largest size is to be built in Germany for the Chinese Government.

Dysentery is increasing to an alarming extent in the German army, and many regiments are compelled to discontinue taking part in the manuvers.

The Czar has lately received models of different weapons and engines of assassination, with a written request that he should select one to be used upon his own person.

Signor Bertinatti, long Italian Minister at Washington and the husband of Miss Dehon, of Boston, died last month in Holland, where he was representing King Humbert.

The Hippodrome in Paris recently started running matches for ladies, and at the Nimes the organizer of the bull fights has engaged women instead of men to act as matadors.

There is a weekly sale in Paris of toads, which are bought in casks, filled with damp moss. One hundred good toads are worth from $15 to $17. These are bought for gardens.

A feature in the case of Kimri Nixon, who stole $1,000 from an estate of which he was trustee, at Komoka Ind., is the fact that he has long been a Quaker preacher of note.

A GENERAL DEFEATED.

A Mrs. J. G. Robertson writes: "I was suffering from general debility, want of appetite, constipation, etc., so that life was a burden; after using Burdock Blood Bitters I felt better than for years. I cannot praise your Bitters too much.

The Jewish population of Vienna is reported to have more than doubled itself, according to the recent census within the past ten years. In 1879 it was 30,200. It is now 72,000.

The official language in the Transvaal is to be Dutch, and no other will be allowed in the law courts. This will, of course, place the British residents and natives at a disadvantage.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

The virtue of the most of the patent medicines with which the market is flooded lies in the name, but the virtues of Burdock Blood Bitters lie in the fact that they cleanse the blood of impurities, and cure dyspepsia, biliousness and indestion. Price $1 00, trial bottle 10 cents.

M. Got, the eminent French comedian was drawn, while at the Conservatorie, in the conscription, and having no funds, had to serve. His Colonel, however, interested the famous Mlle. Mars in his behalf, and after he had served for some time in the cavalry she bought him off.

Ayoob Khan makes no movement from Candahar but he is said to be enlisting in his service all men there who have previously served as soldiers There is reported to be a good deal of quarreling among the troops. All within the British frontier is quiet.

NIL DESPERANDUM.

BECAUSE I'M TWENTY-FIVE.

'Tis wonderful strange how great the change,
Since I was in my teens,

To poison, hang, or drown themselves—
Because I'm twenty-five.

Once, if the night was ev'er so bright,
I ne'er abroad could roam,
Without "The bliss, the honor, Miss,
Of seeing you safely home."
But now, I go, through rain and snow,
Pursued and scared alive—
Through all the dark, without a spark—
Because I'm twenty-five.

They used to call, and ask me all
About my health so frail,
And thought a ride would help my side,
And turn my cheek less pale.
But now, alas! If I am ill,
None care that I revive;
And my pale in vain may speak—
Because I'm twenty-five.

Now, if a ride improves my side,
I'm forced to take the stage,
For this is deemed quite proper for
A person of my age.
And then no hand is offered me,
To take me out alive;
They think 'twont hurt me now to fall—
Because I'm twenty-five.

O, dear! 'tis queer, that every year
I'm slighted more and more;
For not a beau pretends to show
His head within our door.
Nor ride, nor card, nor soft address,
My spirits now revive:
And one might near as well be dead
As say—I'm twenty-five.

THE TRAIL OF FIRE.

WALLS OF FIRE SIXTY FEET HIGH.

FLAMES WHICH OUTRAN GALLOPING HORSES.

BEAR, DEER, AND HUMAN BEINGS SEEKING THE SAME SHELTER.

(M. Quad in the Detroit Free Press.)

On Saturday the 3rd inst., along the eastern shore of Michigan a thin cloud of smoke rested over the forests and gave the lake a hazy look. On Sunday this cloud was thicker. Cattle and had a wild, excited look, and fowls acted in a strange manner. Fires had been burning in Sanilac, Huron, and Tuscola counties, but no one apprehended any danger. Farmers had set fire to slashings to clear the ground for fall wheat, but this happens every fall, and the fact that not a drop of water had fallen in from fifty to seventy days was not considered by those who saw the smoke-clouds and replied that the was no danger. Behind that pall of smoke was a greater enemy than an earthquake, and it had a tornado at its back and 200 miles of forest in the front.

Monday morning the smoke cloud was thicker. Far out in the lake it settled down until lamps on shipboard had to be lighted to see the compass, and there was a weirdness about it which made sailors fear. At noon, on land, no midnight was ever darker. Lamps were powerless to light even a small room. All business was suspended in the streets of the towns, and in the country farmers gathered their wives and children about them, and whispered that it was the coming of the judgment. Hot waves swept through the forests and over the farms, parching the green leaves as if they had been placed in hot ovens. Smoke was everywhere—thick, bitter smoke, which blinded men and suffocated children in their mother's arms. From noon until 2 o'clock a strange terror held the people in its grip. Then, all of a sudden, the heavens took fire, or so it seemed to hundreds. In some localities it came with the sound of thunder. In others it was preceded by a terrible roaring, as if a tidal wave were sweeping over the country. Almost at the same minute the flames appeared in every spot over a district of country thirty miles broad by a hundred in length. A billow of flame ten, thirty, forty, and in some places sixty feet high, fanned by a hot and brisk southwest wind, rolled over this tract and left behind it the charred bodies of hundreds of people, thousands of live stock, and one can hardly tell how many homes. The very air was in flame. A gas formed ahead of the wall of flames, and this snapped and crackled and scorched and withered and left green leaves as dry as powder.

At Richmondville, ten miles above Sanilac, 150 people had comfortable homes, stacks of hay and grain, teams, cows, pigs, sheep and no fear of the fire which they knew was burning a mile away. At two o'clock the flames rushed out of the woods, leaped the fences, ran across bare fields, and swallowed every house but two and roasted alive a dozen people. It is hardly forty rods to the beach of the lake, and yet many people had not time to reach the water. Others reached it with clothing on fire and faces and hands blistered. The houses did not burn singly, but one billow of flame seized them all at once and reduced them to nothing in ten minutes. The two buildings saved were spared by the flames—not saved by the hand of man. The flames swept both sides of them, as if mercifully intending to leave some landmark of the hamlet and some place to shelter women and children and the sick. Forty families in and around this hamlet raced through flame and smoke for the lake. Some reached it, to remain in the water for hours, while others fell on the highway and were burned to a crisp. There was no time to save anything from the houses, and when I rode through the district families which but a day before had been possessed of plenty were not the owner of a knife or spoon. Women were bareheaded and barefooted, children still worse off, and bareheaded men sat on the parched ground and wondered if God had not forsaken them. Every bridge and culvert in this section is gone, and we had to make long detours through fields to pass the spots. Where stood a fine farm ten days ago is now a blackened waste. Where stood a green forest is now a picture of desolation such as you cannot imagine. A terrible cyclone struck this district with the flames, and I saw many and many a spot where the billow of fire jumped a clean half mile out of the forest to clutch house or barn. The roaring and crashing were awful. Horses ran here and there, neighing and almost screaming in their terror; cows and oxen plunged and bellowed and the most savage dogs were so overcome by fear that they ran back into the blazing house and died in the flames. In this awful confusion, with trees crashing down before the cyclone, and the houses being unroofed by its terrible power, while a great billow of flame came sweeping on as fast as a horse could gallop, fathers and mothers were called upon to save themselves and chidren. The highways were lines of fire. Rivers and creeks wer dry ditches. The only chance to escape was to rush for the open fields, and yet in the open fields, men, women and children were burned to cinders. Those who preserved their thought through the confusion preceding the appearance of the flames seized woollen blankets, wet them thoroughly, and drew these over them as they crouched down on the plowed ground, and where this plan was followed their lives were generally saved. In some cases people lay out in the fields fourteen long hours before it was safe to rise up. In a small cornfield above Richmondville twenty-eight people spent the latter part of the afternoon and all night before the flames passed on. To windward of them was a field of peas, and, when the flames got into this, the party in the corn were pelted for hours with hot peas, which were shelled by the fire and wind and carried along by the hot blasts. Wet blankets, constant vigilance, and the standing corn saved these people; but in other localities, where persons sought the same refuge, they were smothered and burned.

Ira Humphrey, the mail carrier, between Elmer City, and Bad Axe, left the former place about 10 o'clock in the morning. The fire was then raging three miles down his route, but he could not be persuaded to give up the trip. His transportation was a horse and buggy, and he made straight for the fire and tried to pass through. Failing in this, he, with blistered face and hands, turned back towards Elmer, only to discover that the flames had cut off his retreat. He halted at a corner where school house stood, and was here joined by about a dozen people who had been driven from their homes. While men were praying, women screaming, and children dumb with terror, the old veteran coolly unhitched his horse, removed the harness, and left the beast as fair a chance for escape as he had himself. He then gathered all the people in the rear of the school house, where they were partly sheltered from the heat, and here he encouraged the men and quieted the women as far as he could. At this time the party were surrounded by a wall of fire, and two dwelling houses only a few rods away were fiercely blazing. Look which way they would there was no escape. The highway fencing here was of heavy logs, and the heat was intense. The fire was backing in from a swamp one way, and in all other directions a great red wave of flame was making a solid wall from the roots to the tops of the highest trees. They knew that the school house must go. When the flames began to crackle in the roof the whole crowd knelt down to pray.

"Yes we all fell down and prayed," said one of the women to me. "We were all huddled together, arms around each other, and yet we could not hear each other's voices We knew that our last hour had come, and I kissed my four children and told them we should all be dead in ten minutes more."

When the heat from the school house became intolerable the whole party scattered. Here was where Mrs. Denison and her child and sister perished on the highway, falling down in flames before the eyes of the husband and father. A man named Jones had his horse here, and when driven out he leaped upon the animal and let him go at will. The horse took down across the front of the fire, into a low wet spot, and though badly singed he carried his rider to a place of safety. Jones had his clothing nearly burned off and his hands and face blistered, but his life was saved.

Humphrey ran south, probably believing that the fire in that direction having burned the longest, would give him the best show for escape. Twenty rods from the school house the heat became so intense that he turned to the west into a field of corn, and here his body was found. It was burned and blistered in a dozen places and most of the clothing had burned off. He lay with his face in the dirt, and the contracted limbs were evidence that death had been full of tortures. Some of the party saved themselves by burrowing in the ditches, and others preserved in the fields. The horse took the road home at a gallop, and though badly burned he ran the gauntlet of the flames.

On this line road sixty-nine farmers were left without house, barn, fencing, furniture or food, and in many cases one or more members of the family had been roasted alive. In one instance four families were living in a little old stable which the fire had somehow spared, and were cooking a sort of hoe-cake over a fire at the door. Their sole cooking utensil was an old dust pan which had been taken from the yet hot ashes of a burned farm house.

To the north of this the Thornton family were wiped out with the exception of a boy. Thornton had hitched up his team to drive the family to a place of safety, but when he saw that they were all surrounded by the flames he unhitched the horses in despair. Before they could be unharnessed they bolted in different directions, and the old man became so confused that he ran directly towards a big slashing, which was then a perfect mass of flame, and dropped and died with his head towards it. Meantime the mother and children had taken refuge in the root house. This was a structure mostly sunk in the ground and the roof well covered with earth. Here they were all right for a time, but when the father failed to join them one of the sons went out to see what caused the delay. He was hardly out the place before the door through which he had passed was in flames. In this emergency he ran to a dry creek, and by lying on his face and keeping his mouth to the ground he lived through it. I talked with a woman who lived neighbor to the Thorntons, and who escaped by fleeing to a field of plowed ground, This was only a few rods from the root-house, and said it was fully an hour before the screams and shrieks and groans from the people inside grew quiet in death. One by one they were suffocated by heat and smoke, and their bodies presented a horrible appearance.

To one riding through the district it seems miraculous that a single soul escaped. The fire swept through the green trees the same as the dry. It ran through fields of corn with a speed of twenty miles an hour, and fields of green clover were swept as bare as a floor Dark and gloomy swamps, filled with ponds of stagnant water, and the home for years of wild cats, bears &c., were struck and shrivelled and burned almost in a flash. Over the parched meadows the flames ran faster than a horse could gallop. Horses did gallop before it, but were overtaken and left roasting on the ground. It seemed as if every hope and avenue of escape were cut off, and yet hundreds of lives were spared. People spent ten to twenty hours in ditches and ponds, or in fields under wet blankets, having their hair singed, their limbs blistered and their clothing burned off piece by piece.

In between Elmer and Cumber there was an old man named Goodrich, who was living with his son-in-law. Goodrich is nearly 80 years of age, and has been ailing all summer. Only the day before the fire it was thought that he must die. When he heard that the flames were approaching he got out of bed and dressed himself, and was led out on a plowed field and covered with a wet blanket. Here he lay for several hours with his feet out to the heat. He had on a good pair of cowhide boots, and the heat actually baked them. I could pick the leather to pieces with my fingers, and it only needed a slight grip of the thumb and finger to draw the iron nails from the heavy soles. While Goodrich had his feet blistered the scare cured his sickness, and I myself saw him walk a distance of nearly a mile.

All in through this district the people were convinced that the day of judgment was at hand. The sky was first as black as midnight. Then it turned as red as blood. Then came the terrible cyclone with its awful roar, and the boldest man among them was struck with terror. A mile north of where the old man Goodrich lived was a family which had a crazy son. When the smoke began to darken the country he began to get excited, and on the dark day, two hours before the flames came, he mounted a horse and galloped up and down the country, crying out that the last day had come, and that the earth was to be swept clean. Later he was seen rushing headlong towards the flames, whooping and cheering, and no doubt he perished first of all. The horse itself seemed to partake of the rider's spirit and his shrill neighs answered the cheers of the rider.

In dozens of cases the first flame spared houses and barns, but after seeming to have passed on for miles, suddenly circled backed and made a clean sweep of everything. Unless one rides over the burned district, he cannot believe the eccentricities of a forest fire. In the great swamp between Sanilac and Sandusky it burned everything to the roots for a mile in breadth. Then it left patches from ten feet to ten rods wide. Then again it struck in and burned lanes hardly twenty feet wide, leaving half a mile of fuel on each side. In timber it seemed to strike the green trees harder than the dry ones. It was like a great serpent making its way across the country. It would run within three feet of a wheat stack and then glide away to lick up a house. It would burn a stack and spare a barn ten feet off. It was hard to credit some of the sights before my eyes. In one case the two hubs of a seed-drill in a plowed field were burned out and every spoke in each wheel left perfect. No damage was done to any other part of the machine, and the fire stopped of its own accord. Near by a man had been chopping the day before and left his axe sticking in a small beech tree. This tree burned down to the axe, fell over, and was entirely consumed, and yet the handle of the axe was not even scorched. I saw wagons where three wheels were burned off and the fourth left intact, and again where only one wheel of the four had suffered. Houses defended by a dozen men and plenty of water burned to the ground, while others abandoned to the flames stand there to-day. I saw a house where the front door-step was burned away and the flames then refused to do further damage. Again where one of the props was consumed and nothing else even scorched. A coloured woman living back of Richmondville had eight children to care for, and her husband was absent. She was throwing things out of the house when the fire sprang from the woods and caught the roof in a dozen places. She made a run with the baby in her arms and the other seven around her and escaped. The house, well curb, fence, fruit trees and all else were consumed, and yet two pillows flung out on the grass in her excitement, were not even scorched. I looked them carefully over and could not find where even a spark had struck them. Again, I saw where furniture had been buried in the plowed fields half a mile from the woods, and chairs and tables were reduced to ashes—people felt the heat while the fire was yet miles away. It withered the leaves of trees standing two miles from the path of the fiery serpent. The very earth took fire in hundreds of places, and blazed up as if the fire fire was feasting on cordwood. The stoutest log building stood up only a few minutes. The fire seemed to catch them at every corner at once, and after a whirl and a roar nothing would be left. Seven miles off the beach, at Forrester, sailors found the heat uncomfortable. Where some houses and barns were burned we could not find even a blackened stick. Every log, beam and board was reduced to fine ashes.

Seven miles back from the lake, at Forester, a farmer gathered up fifteen persons in his wagon and started for the beach. The fire was close behind them as they started—so close that the dresses of some of the women and children were on fire from the sparks. It was seven miles up hill and down, with corduroy, ruts and roots, and the horses needed no whip to urge them into a mad run. As the wagon started the tire of a hind wheel rolled off. They could not stop for it, and yet, on a good road, the wheel would have crushed down in going twenty rods without it. It is an actual fact that the horses pushed over that seven miles of rough road at a wild run and the wheel stood firm. A delay of five minutes at any point of the road would have given fifteen more victims to the flames which followed on behind. I saw the waggon at the lake, I saw the tire seven miles away on the roadside.

The people who sought the beach had still to endure much of the heat and all of the smoke. Wading out to the shoulders they were safe from the flames, but sparks and cinders fell like a snow storm, and the smoke was suffocating. The birds not caught in the woods were carried out to sea and drowned, and the waves have washed thousands of them ashore. Squirrels, rabits and such small animals stood no show at all, but dear and bear sought the beach and the company of human beings. In one case a man leaped from a bluff into the lake and found himself close behind a large bear. They remained in company close to the bank nearly all night, and the bear seemed as humble as a dog. In another instance two of the animals came out of the forest and stood close to a well from which a farmer was drawing water to dash on his house, and there they were with him for two hours before they deemed it prudent to jog along. Deer came out and sought the companionship of cattle and horses, and paid no attention to persons rushing past them.

Half enough coffins to bury the dead could not have been got into the burnt district in a week. Some were burried with neither coffin nor shroud, while others had rude boxes as their last receptacle. In Carsonville, in one case, the coffin was made of roof boards taken from a shed, sawed up with a cross-cut saw, and fastened together with nails taken from the ashes of the victim's burned home.

The dead are buried, but there is left a horribly desolate waste of country full of the ashes of prosperity, and crowded with sick, wounded and discouraged humanity, whose tears and groans must open the heart of sympathy in every corner of the country.—Turn which way they will, they see black ruin and utter desolation.

GHOST HUNTERS SCATTERED BY A CLUB.

For some time the residents of Temple street, Peterson, N. J., have seen a ghost, at the usual hour when ghosts walk—midnight. The apparition was that of a woman bearing a child in her arms. The neighbors alleged that the figure was in the habit of taking a look at the surroundings and then sitting down in full view of a group of houses which cluster around Helgram & Mayer's mill, and which are occupied by the firm's employes. The story is circulated, too, that the apparition is no ghost at all, but that it is a case of kidnapping, that the woman is in hiding somewhere in the neighborhood, and that every night in this way she goes out to take the air. This rumor has moved every mother's heart, and on Wednesday night a crowd gathered at the spot, among them a great many women. They were armed with different kinds of weapons, and lighted the place with torches. The hunt began at the hour of twelve, but it proved in vain, and the ghost hunters were about to start for their homes, when sudddenly the sound was heard: "Here comes the ghost." At the same time a figure dressed in white rushed through the crowd in half a minute, and the figure was left victor of the ground. The truth of it was that the white figure that so madly chased the crowd was a young man who had watched the progress of the party, and when it was about to disperse thought to hasten its footsteps. The female ghost has not appeared since.

A BANG-UP AFFAIR.

A St. Louis paper chronicle with genial particularity the recent simultaneous marriage of three daughters of Dr. Bang, of that city. As a first-class, bang-up bit of society news, this report seems to appropriate the muffin. Dr. Charles Bang, the father has for many years kept a drug store on the corner of Fifteenth street and Franklin avenue, and the bridegrooms are respectively a candy manufacturer, a bank teller, and a dentist. They are described as being every way worthy of the fortunate matrimonial prizes they have drawn. The wedding went off cheerfully. When Mr. Bang, having signed an affidavit for one daughter, was called to sign a second one, he exclaimed:

"What! must I sign again?"

"Certainly," replied the clerk; this isn't a job lot. You have to sign for each one."

When the applications were all made out, the clerk said to Mr. Bang,

"You ought to feel happy to get so many daughters of your hands at once."

The doctor replied:

"They took all I had; that breaks up the family."

"Yes," said Mr. Wetzel, "that was a regular wholesale business; we made a clean sweep."

When the clerk was asking for the names that went together in the licenses, Dr. Herman exclaimed:

"Don't you make any mistake, now, and give me the wrong girl; I want the one that belongs to me."

When everything was concluded, except paying fees, Dr. Bang said:

"The next thing is—"

"The next thing is," interupted Mr. Wetzel, one of the prospective husbands, to go out and get some beer."

"But the licenses are not paid for yet."

"No matter, we can pay for them in the morning when we get them."

The party then filed out gleefully, and no doubt had the beer. The triple marriage recalls an anecdote related of an eccentric minister a number of years ago, who was called upon to marry three couples at once. The parties were standing around promiscuously, waiting for the arrival of the minister, and when he came in he marched up to them exclaiming: "Sort yourselves."

The story has reached St. Petersburg from Geneva and Paris that the Russian nobility are so dissatisfied with the conduct of the Czar that they have joined a socialist association, which they support by large sums of money and the object of which is the assassination of the Czar and his brother Valdimir.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

PEACEFUL CLOSE OF A NOBLE LIFE.

After a struggle with death for a period of almost unexampled length, the President of the United States succumbed to the fell destroyer, and died quietly on the night of Monday, 19th inst., at 10:35 o'clock. Thus has passed away one of the noblest men who ever filled the Presidential chair, cut down at a comparatively early age by the treacherous hand of a brutal assassin. We doubt if any individual during the present or past ages ever excited such universal sympathy the world over. His cheerfulness, his patience, his courage, his submission to the will of his physicians, and his manly fortitude during the prolonged struggle of eighty days had won the admiration of the whole world, and now that death has put an end to his suffering, we doubt not his family will receive the heartfelt sympathy of all civilized nations. We will conclude this painful subject with the following remarks taken from the Toronto Mail. There was a pathetic spirit of prophecy in his remark to his wife—"What is the use of struggling for the little pinch of life I "shall get at best?" It has indeed been but a pinch; and that little time was so painful that death at first would have been better. But he has had his last hours soothed by the tireless love of his family, and the ceaseless sympathy of his people and of the world; and he had the consciousness not always present with public men in Republics, that the future of his family had been assured by the grateful generosity of a nation. There is no need at this date to repeat for public information the facts of his life; these have long been familiar. The fact of his death is the melancholly circumstance which at this moment overtops them all.

EUGENIA.

From our own Correspondent.

SHE CAUGHT HIM.—We have just heard of a scene which was enacted a short time ago near this place, in which all present derived immense amusement, except the parties more immediately concerned,--a young man of this neighborhood, who all of those who were acquainted with him imagined to be innocent of any matrimonial alliance, but the ways of transgressors are hard, as no doubt the poor fellow discovered, and his appetite for a hearty meal (to which he was applying himsely), destroyed by the appearence of a Lady at the door of the farm house where he was employed, in search of her absent lord. Shewas requested to walk in and take a chair. The young man answered her day as though she was a casual acquaintance How long have you been here James? Why did you not write to me? But he could not see any reason why he should write to her. Matters began to look a good deal like that Monday afternoon. What, not write to her, not write to his wife? He indignantly repudiated the assertion, when, at this, her form and voice rose to an eagle altitude, and in accents anything but indicative of conjugal felicity, dared him to deny her. Did not her very appearence and the proofs, she had in the shape of a duly signed license, which she read, call the circumstances to his mind. She now "Held the Fort," and under threats of arrest, pains and penalties, he surrendered, and was marched off by the home guard to a conveyance which she had at hand, to try once more the blessing in store for him at home.

What becomes of all the Auditors reports of this Township? Does Ward No. 1 not deserve any? Not one ratepayer whom we have asked if they have seen any of them has done so. Why are they not left in the P. Office for distribution? Not one te be seen in that public instusion. By what constituted authority has any person the power to retain them in his possession being the property of the ratepayers of the Township? Perhaps they are only intended to be seen by a few individuals, if so, why the expense of printing so many? Perhaps it would be well to compell parties to account for them, as they must know they are the property of other people.

NOTICE.—We wish it disinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent "Subscriber" writes in such a peculiar way that I don't know what to think of him; he speaks so lightly about debt, that I am forced to conclude that he must be altogether ignorant of its practical effects.

Apparently he has never been hauled up before Judge McPherson, has never had a visit of the Bailiff, has not even been "dunned" by a creditor, knows nothing at all of the enormous cost of entering suit, issuing summons, duplicate, service, mileage, return, hearing, entering judgment, issuing execution, Bailiff's fees, expense of sale, ruin of having your goods sold by Bailiff &c., &c., besides the sleepless nights, and wearisome days to self, wife and family, a meanly clothed back and empty stomach, the jeers of of one's enemies, the cold shoulder of our warmest (pretended) friends, and the general depression, disgrace, and demoralization attending even a single suit, and as misfortunes seldom come singly, it often happens that one small debt ruins a family for life. "Subscriber" seems ignorant of all this, and talks about wiseacres of one class and another who seem to think that debt is one of the chief necessaries of Life, and argues that "the best way of increasing our church income is to lose no time in getting into debt, keep piling it up," says he, "as we advance into debt find out means to follow it up, so as not altogether lose sight of it." This is curious reasoning. Subscriber is anxious not to lose sight of it. Why, sir, there are hundreds of thousands who are exceedingly anxious not only to lose sight of their debts, but to lose them "teetotally," so that no one will ever see them more. But creditors have better memories than debtors. Creditors are a superstitious sect, great observers of set days and times. Says Franklin, "If your cannot pay at the time, you will be ashamed to see your creditor; you will be in fear when you speak to him; you will make poor, pitiful, sneaking excuses; and by degrees come to lose your veracity, and sink into base, downright lying; for the second vice is lying; the first is running into debt!' Yes, Mr. Editor, "it is hard for an empty bag to stand upright," and "a ploughman on his legs is higher than a gentleman on his knees."

Debt, did we say? Why sir, debt is, directly or indirectly, the parent of nearly all our troubles! Without debt there is very little use for Courts, Bailiffs, Lawyers, Jails, Poor-houses, and many other consequent evils; our County and Provincial taxes would be reduced fifty per cent! One part of the community would not get so fast rich; nor the present debt-contract ing party so fast poor; there would be more equality and consequently more happiness; if men, particularly farmers, would resolve to buy nothing on credit that they could possibly do without, how many would be added to the list of producers, who are at present running to and fro in the country, making "lots of money" off the class who esteem debt lightly, and who are ever ready to buy if they can get credit; let the earnings of these be added to the savings of the others, and the increased prosperity to all be applied to Religious and Benevolent purposes and we might say the Millenium would be begun.

It would rather amuse Subscriber if he were to make a little enquiry into the financial position of many churches, particularly those in cities. Does he know that in many cases there are from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars and upwards on many of the city churches? This must be a fearful burden, and must retard most seriously the prosperity of these congregations.

The debt on churches in the country is comparatively trifling; still no debt however small in amount is a trivial matter. If all our congregations were free from debt what bickerings and strife and money lectures from the Pulpit would be saved? A congregation with a thousand a year of income can pay their minister a comfortable salary, keep up a good Sabbath school, and do many other useful things; but if some thousands of debt were on their church, the utmost pinching on all sides would have to be resorted to, the minister probably a hundred or two short, and every one dissatisfied. All who have taken part in church management know that there are difficulties enough without debt; if it were not so, would the schemes which Subscriber mentions, concerts, garden parties, festivals, soirees, raffles, bazaars, &c., ever be resorted to as a source of income? I trow not, therefore I say keep out of debt, if at all possible, and if you cannot keep entirely free, let the debt be the minimum, and such that in two or three years at most, it will be "lost sight of" by the liberality of our members paying it off. Subscriber asks, does M. want to drive all sociality out of the church? I emphatically answer, no; by no means; but let our social meetings be social meetings; meetings for the enjoyment of each other; mutual, friendly, social intercourse; let dollars and cents be far from such meetings; we are invited to a festival, a garden party, or the like, admittance 25c., whether is it us or the 25c. that is wanted? assuredly the 25 cents; away with such friendly (?) gatherings, call them money gatherings, not friendly gatherings. If the Sabbath school requires a dollar a year from me to keep it up, can I not just give the dollar at once, instead of so many ladies and others being put about collecting and begging and baking as much that I and others may get a "gormandize" three or four times a year. I am sure that the money spent and time wasted in getting up these meetings is generally of more value than the total receipts; by all means let us have our social gatherings. What is there to hinder A., who has plenty of strawberries and cream in their season to invite B., C., D., E., F., and G. and their wives and their families to a strawberry and cream festival some fine summer evening, and if there be a musical instrument on hand let them have music and singing, and dancing too, if they like, and the intervals taken up with intellectual intercourse, and if they are christian families, the infinite Love, Goodness, and Mercy of "our Father in Heaven" will not be forgotten; we read in Malachi that in his day, when religion was very low, when both Priest and people were reproved for their many sins; when money! money! was the cry. "Who is there, even among you, that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle a fire on mine altar for nought." Even in these degenerate days we say, the true saints we believe had their social meetings, for we read that "then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it; and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name." We do not say make these social gatherings prayer meetings, not at all, let every thing be done decently and in order, social meetings in their own place, and prayer meetings in their own place; as to congregational gatherings, they would have to be managed somewhat different, but never let us have a gathering under the mask of Christian sociality where the chief aim is at drawing a promiscuous crowd for the purpose of raising money for church purposes. Subscriber asks if Christ's disciples are to remain sour, solemn, and selfishly apart; I can answer, no; no true disciple of Christ will be either "sour" or "selfish;" true, he will "remain apart" from many things, and among the chief of these, will be bad, or ungodly company. The disciple of Christ who is "sour and selfish," is proclaiming to the world his own hypocrisy; a good man cannot be sour and selfish; a Christian looks to his great Head for a pattern, and looking to all that is recorded of our Saviour we neither find sourness nor selfishness, but we find the social element very strong. We frequently have marriages taking place around us, at which there must always be at least one bearing the name of Christian, compare the present usage in regard to marriages with the marriage in Cana of Gallilee. I suppose if Dr. Sproule had provided a plentiful supply of cakes and wine and asked the Governor of the feast to pour out a glass to the Reverend gentlemen who were officiating and helping at the ceremony they would have considered themselves insulted, and decency outraged; yea, we have known where a home made commodity has been used at the Sacrament of the supper, rather than adopt the divinely appointed means; this is not acting upon our Saviour's example, who at the marriage, when a want of wine ensued, miraculously produced a supply, whereby the festivities were continued; and if He had thought best to institute the supper with water, or any other liquid, it would have been easy for him to do so; but he took wine, the first Priest we read of, Melchisedec, presented cakes and wine to Abraham. I do not say that we should introduce wine at all our social gatherings, but if, on occasions of rejoicing, such as a marriage feast, good wine was served to the guests, I, for one, could see no harm. From these remarks "Subscriber" will see that I am not a friend of "sourness" nor "selfishness." To Subscriber I would say in a word let us cheerfully contribute liberally for all religious purposes, and let us have as many social gatherings as you like, only don't let them stink of "filthy lucre."

M.

THAT THREATENING LETTER.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

In your issue of the 22nd of June, I find that one Mr. Brown has been airing himself to the public, in order to let them know that he is a moral man, endowed with a keen sense of right and wrong, that he can sniff villainy in every breeze that fans our beloved village. Well some are born great, some acquire greatness, and some have greatness trust upon them, to this latter class belongs Mr. Brown Nature denied him even a mediocre share of common sense, consequently we find him rushing in where angels fear to tread. However I think the careful reader will agree with me, that in penning that letter Mr. Brown injured himself more than any one else. Some might have had a slight suspecion who the author of that contemptible and criminal threatening letter was, but now very few of your intelligent readers could hesitate to point with a dead certainty to the author.

No wonder that he can talk so glibly about that letter being "no mystery" &c. That which is a mystery to the innocent, is quite plain to the perpetrator of an evil deed.

Mr. Brown talks about crime, black guardism, &c., with a flippancy that would cause the uniniated in his ways to believe him a virtuoso, Now I would ask who is this sanctimonious phypocrite, that he should set himself up as a moral mentor to the people of Markdale, and hurl at their heads the sweepings ascertions he did? Is there not considerable of the pharisee through out the whole tone of the letter,—a thanking God that he is not like other men.

The tone of Mr. Brown's letter would lead the casual reader to believe that crime had been committed or attempted, and that I am the author. Nothing is farther from the truth. I am ready (though perhaps bashfully un willing) to meet the facts in the face any day.

It is foregin to my sense of respectability to hold up to the gaze of a morbid public the fair cause of this trouble, in which I am defamed by this legalized (?) libeller—one whose testimony passes as an idle sound through the atmosphere, and is not regarded but with derision by all classes of our community.

Common courtesy and an inherent sense of decency and honor, seals my lips from an avowal which would place me right before the public. One person's name has been dragged through the scandal monger's gutter, and whose fame and respectibility I endeavored to shield; but now that her uncle has opened afresh the silence of infamious accusations, she may well exclaim, "Save me from my friends."

It is to be regretted that Brown has vented so much spleen to so little purpose. He either has an itch for writing with the gratifying accompaniment of seeing his plebian name in print, that has caused him to make the fearful onslaught he did in your last issue, something in the style of the man who carried virtue in his hand and the Devil on his tongue.

Brown says "a great crime has been committed, * * all the greater because the law provides no adequate punishment for the offence." In the first place he belies the Statute Book, and in the second place he is making a bid for the election of his worthless carcas to Parliament.

But, I may be wrong in all these premises, he may be only taking an ingenious mode of building shattered reputations. If Brown intends to build up his reputation and popularity by libelling and black-mailing, or giving expression to the dark venom of own black heart, I can only say that he is too well known by the respectable people of the county, and he must resort to some other mode of pulling down the curtain of contempt that intervenes between himself and public favor.

It is a wonder to me, Mr. Editor, that so moral a man as this same Mr. Brown, could consent to remain in a place where rowdyism, blackgaurdism &c., reigns rampant, where most of the population are from the country, and have brought with them their filthy and disgusting moral habits into the village. After all, is this great display of holy horor caused by what he terms my great crime,—is it not rather an attempt to strike a cowardly blow at a successful commercial rival, over my shoulders?

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the space you have given me in your valuable columns, I remain

Your's truly,

C. A. OWEN.

REMINISCENCES OF A TRIP FROM OWEN SOUND TO SAULT STE MARIE.

ROYAL BANK, Sept., 10th 1881.

Twenty-one miles takes us from Cockburn to Thessalon on the Northern Shore of Lake Huron. One of the best saw mills in Algoma is here, also stores, shoe-maker's shop, and other conveniences. The Country back is settling very fast. This, with the lumber trade does, and will keep business lively. A very promising silver vein has been found within rifle shot of the dock, a few days ago. Four hundred acres were taken up on the head of it, and mining is all the talk. It is said to be a second "Silver Islet." As people around Markdale will like to know what the land on the North Shore is like, I will describe it, Imagine a country with lofty hills and mountains and large valleys, studded with little lakes, with a few muddy creeks and rivers. Timbered with birch, pine maple, soft elm, ash, and shrubs, these heights of granite (no lime stone on the North Shore, not even a pebble) and the valley's of clay with scarcely a stone. And you have the physical features of the North Shore as well as I have seen and can describe them. The want of lime stone is a great one. All our lime is brought from Manitoulin, Owen Sound and else where. Your readers will think that there will be no goïtre or swelled neck here on this account. We are told that there are several bad cases of it. The women are saved the trouble of knocking the lime off the pans and kettles.

The country is laid out in sections of 460 acres. No roads are left in the survey, but the patent reserves five per cent for roads to be taken where necessary. This is a good idea in a rough country, as it saves much expense in cutting down hills, when a deviation will save it. The land is sold at 20 cents an acre, and we think every male can purchase half a section. We expect Algoma will recieve a great impulse on the exact location of the railway. There is talk of two railway's, but if we get one we will be satisfied.

Many of the worst attacks of cholera morbus, cramps, dysentery and cholic come suddenly in the night, and the most speedy and prompt means must be used to combat their dire effects. Dr. Fowlers Extract of Wild Strawberry is the remedy. Keep it at hand for emergencies. It never fails to cure or relieve.

CANADIAN CHOLERA.

This terrible disease is but little less fatal than real Asiatic cholera, and requires equally prompt treatment. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry will cure it as well as all other forms of bowel complaints of infants or adults if used in proper time.

A visit to W. J. McFarland's immense establishment will well repay any one in want of goods. He and his large staff of hands are working night and day with their coats off opening huge bales and cases of dress goods, winceys, shirtings, shawls, mantles, silks, satins, carpets, laces, tweeds, flowers, &c., &c., selected personally from the manufactures by Mr. McFarland while in Europe.

The shades of evening were falling fast,
As through Markdale city passed
A blooming maid in cashmere dressed,
With this device upon her breast
McFarland's cashmeres are the best. Price 55 cts., all wool.

Her brows were knit beneath her veil,
Her eyes flashed like a comet's tail,
And in clarion bugle sung
The tones of that outlandish tongue
Go to McFarland's for your winceys, kid gloves, and everything you want, he imports direct.

Oh stay, the young man cried, and rest
Thy tired head upon this vest.
A tear rolled down her painted cheek,
But still she answered with a squeak
The greatest hit of the day—clothing for young, clothing for old, and boots—thousands of pairs—cheap, at McFarland's, and don't you forget it.

THE SADDEST OF SAD SIGHTS.—The grey hairs of age being brought with sorrow to the grave is now, we are glad to think, becoming rarer every year as the use of Cingalese Hair Restorer becomes more general. By its use the scanty locks of age once more resume their former color and the hair becomes thick and luxuriant as ever; with its aid we can now defy the change of years, resting assured that no Grey Hair at any rate will come to sadden us. Sold by all Druggists, 50 cents a bottle.

DEATH OF REV. LACHLAN TAYLOR.—The news of the death of Rev. Lachlan Taylor, which took place at Sackville, New Brunswick, on Sunday the 14th inst., will be received with universal regret throughout Canada. No minister of the Methodist Church in the Dominion was more widely known, and more universally liked. A native of the Highlands of Scotland, he was possessed of a full share of the Celtic energy and eloquence, and in the position of agent of the Bible Society, which he occupied for many years, as well as in the subsequent lectures on his travels, he was familiar in every portion of the Province, and many will be the regrets expressed that the eloquent tongue of Dr. Taylor is now stilled in death.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

THE GREATEST PART OF DUNTROON DESTROYED BY FIRE.—THE RESULT OF CARLESNESS.

About 9 o'clock on the evening of the 16th inst., a fire was discovered in the stable of H. Watson, hotel-keeper, consuming the building in a short time. From this the fire extended to the store of J. Gray, in which was the office of the Montreal Telegraph company, the dwelling of Dr. Kirkland the store of W. Campbell blacksmith shop of Mr. Cluson, and two other houses were also consumed. The fire is supposed to have originated from leaving a lamp in the stable.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to W. S. Christoe, (he denies Ratepayer) I am in a position to address him by his pet name. But I am sorry to say, Dr., that you are no more righteous than he. It is a pity to see a reeve and a warden subscribe to such an obscene epistle. "When the wicked rule, the people mourn." What must the fountain be when such an unclean stream proceeds from it? If dame Rumour be true, I am not the first that rebuked you. When you drew a picture of the most degraded, dissipated, drunken profligate that could dwell in your imagination, and his ragged little boy, then you stated that this man described in your lecture was the father of your being, and you were the little boy. Then a young man in the audience rebuked you with the following quotation "Honor thy father and mother, ... Gen. ix, 22." If that be true, and you have attained to the estate your man Friday of the Advance pictured you to have, then there is hope in store for Dodds, whose antecedents are respectable, and is worthy to be called a man. Your theory would establish the notion that labor, however honourable, is degrading; but this is only believed by those whose education has been barely sufficient to make them believe, that idleness and gentility are allied. I have stated work, and draw the largest salary of any man in Flesherton, and have not changed my occupation; but aspire to be a first-class judge of grain and head miller, and am not at the beck of every Biddy and Bridget in the land at all hours, rain, hail, or snow; or chimney-sweep, or Tom, Dick, or Harry, and bound to obey; but how appreciated please enquire in the neighborhood of Eugenia. Doubtless, Mr. Editor, the Dr.'s history is fresh in the minds of your numerous readers, since Mr. G. J. Blyth circulated it through the medium of the Expositor. However, it matters little to me, I do not stoop to dabble in dirty matters. My history is very short, Dr., I mean to live, to have a name when you will be forgotten. A man may occupy high and honourable positions and qualify for the same on property owned in another's name and be a poor, miserable creature himself. You mistake when you think I assume pleasantry, I am only amused looking at you driving in the old dilapidated chaise; perhaps you will look spruced up a bit when you get Dodds' old harness on. One would think the old horse and rig, not omitting yourself, had been in the ark with Noah. In regard to my articles and their merit or demerit, we will not differ; but look to the effect. Ratepayer said the roads were in first-class condition, I held they were not, which has been proven to a demonstration, from the fact that the Council gave a grant to be applied to the very section of the road complained of, and when the commissioner went over the road, he said the grant was only an introduction to the requirements and that it was too late to expend money except to patch it up. You watched the correspondence between Ratepayer and I, and should have taken action in the matter, and done your duty like a good honest public servant, and saved your popularity that you pay so much adoration to; but you are timid in your policy; yet rash and vain of your wisdom; yet constantly guilty of follies; yet a slave to the basest personalities; jealous of your rights; yet from want of courage, continually allowing young men to show you the township's requirements; and I showed you that you kicked Artemesia's best interests to the wind, because it happened to be popular with a few loons that howled well for you on election days. If you had been sincere in your convictions you were excusable; but I have taken the calibre of your head, and lo, it is shallow. Every man should show his principles, and let people know what he believes, especially on great religious, moral, commercial or political questions. If he does, he will not be called a sycophant or a fool. But the day will come, yea, has come that we see the T., G. & B. railway passing into the hands of the Northern Company. Now they control the Hamilton & North-Western and Credit Valley,—four lines east of us. We have Messrs. Hendrie &Co., owning the entire stock in our road, and Mr. Wm. Hendrie, President. If any of your readers doubt the statement, please be referred to last week's Owen Sound Times; and who got the credit of saving the township from paying the bonus? You, Dr. If Artemesia had known your mission the morning your first smoke curled through the roof of the old log cabin you took refuge in, they would have put on sackcloth and ashes. When will the year of jubilee come. But you may object that it was correspondent who caused the roads to be repaired, and say it was the men that waited on the Council; perhaps it would be no offence to say that I sent those men; and were they not both respectable and responsible, and sound business men, not like your followers, and do not require blowing up like the Sampsons of the Advance; although that editor vowed not to notice Dodds, see the way he howled. I have no doubt, Dr., when you got this dose that you will act what is called the Banshee.

It generally takes three to manage Dodds. The only difference is, in this and the last, a woman figured to some advantage; but Barney O'Hare may turn out like you, Dr., no man at all. Still I cherish your convictions and agree that you made a mistake in rebuking Sandy. Nay, you thought to silence Sandy.

Your statement about the Widow Thompson is a downright falsehood, and she was not a widow at the time. She was going to give my money to another miller, and when she paid up she was at liberty to deal with whom she saw fit. If you are anxious about the success of the Advance, never write another line for its columns, and it will succeed; although the moral rays of Flesherton has not penetrated it to any depth yet, and it is you that is to blame, doctor. Certainly the remarks of the Editor on the eliminating bodies are learned. But what could you expect when he draws his inspiration from you, doctor? If the municipalties suffer loss from your actions in the railway matter, I suggest the tar you have prepared be applied to yourself. Fare-you-well, doctor. Glory in your shame. With the best wishes for the success of the STANDARD,

Yours, G. L. DODDS.

MR. EDITOR,—Absence from home, and stress of work since my return, prevented me from attending sooner to the Rev. Mr. Ward's communication which appeared in the STANDARD of the 9th ... Now, however, with your permission, I shall devote a little time to the consideration of that diffuse and ... production.

My first impression on reading that letter was one of surprise and pity; surprise that a gentleman of his assumed culture and refinement should allow himself to indulge in the use of language so unbecoming; pity that his vanity should prompt him to assume such lofty airs.

We quote: "It is a strong temptation to come down on him, but as it would be too much like bringing out a cannon to shoot a fly, we will allow his position to save him this time." Very considerate indeed; wonderful forbearance! Now, it is possible that this may be considered a grand "hit" in some quarters; in our opinion it is simply coarse, vulgar and egotistical, and betrays a familiarity with the language of the fish market, strangely inconsistent with good breeding.—The Rev. gentleman is doubtless a mighty man in his own estimation, a veritable CANNONUS MAGNUS, and henceforth the traditional "Roaring Meg," and the "Great Gun of Athlone" will have to be relegated to a back seat, and the great ecclesiastical cannon of Markdale take their place. Nevertheless we are convinced, notwithstanding Mr. Ward's self-imposed title, that the world will persist in gauging his ability and learning by a far more unerring standard; and that gentleman need not be surprised, if he find that instead of being considered a real cannon, he is voted but a mere ordinary squirt-gun. It is no sign of courage to see a person boasting of his prowess, neither is it any sign of superior learning or ability to see a person boasting of knowledge; on the contrary, the braggart is generally a coward, and the boasted scholar but a mere pedant.

Mr. Ward thinks that I am deplorably ignorant of "Church History," and professes to have discovered this from my letters. Now this is another instance of that gentleman's marvelous prescience, as no ordinary mortal could have arrived at that conclusion from the data referred to. We have said nothing as yet about church history for the simple reason that it sheds but very dim and doubtful light on the subject under discussion, viz.: the government of the Apostolic Church.

The Rev. gentleman admits, and very justly, that the "last thirty years of the first century is almost an entire blank in church history;" why, then, does he persist in fishing among the uncertain, obscure, and often contradictory pages of profane history for a counterpart to his "Catholic and Apostolic Church" if he is satisfied that it is to be found in the New Testament? Is that not enough? "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to these it is because there is no truth in them."

Mr. Ward would like very well to draw off the attention of your readers from the well-known writings of the Apostles, to the little known writings of the so-called Apostles' successors; doubtless conscious of the fact that the Apostles in their writings give no sanction or encouragement to the pretentions either of the Romish or Anglican hierachy. Church history, while it may be serviceable as corroborative testimony, yet if it conflicts with scripture, it cannot be acknwledged as of the slightest value. While we speak thus let it not be supposed that we dread an appeal to church history or any other history. No! on the contrary, from these sources we can show most unmistakeably the gradual rise and developement of that gigantic apostacy which arose upon the ruins of the early Christian church, and which overshadowed Christendom for a period of nearly thirteen hundred years; from the same source we learn that the form of government which that apostate Church adopted was the Episcopal. How do we account for the fact that the Churches of the Reformation, with the singe exception of the Anglican, rejected Episcopacy as a Romish invention? Shall we be told that those eminent reformers, Calvin, Knox, Zuinglias, Melacthon, &c., knew nothing of Church history? Why did the Church of England alone of all the Reformation Churches, cling to Episcopacy? Why this! The Church of England was and still is a gigantic politico-religious organization, gotten up for the express purpose of bolstering up monarchy and aristocracy; just as Orangeism was gotten up in after years to prop up the State Church and landlordism in Ireland. A careful study of English history will convince any candid inquirer of the truth of this. The English Church was just as much a creation of the State as any city or municipal corporation, and hence, as a State engine, it was meddled and organised so as to serve the purposes of the state, and King James I, though a simpleton, yet he had sufficient acuteness to see this, hence his famous remark, "To Bishop, no King."

Mr. Editor, we were led to make these preliminary remarks for the purpose of defining more clearly the relative merits of the question at issue, viz.: "Presbyter versus Episcopacy." We shall now proceed, seriatim, to the consideration of Mr. Ward's letter. Mr. Ward remarks, "Among the Jews none could approach the presence of God but such as were particularly appointed by Him." Who denies this? Why does the Rev. gentleman lose his breath in combatting a theory which we all admit? Mr. W. next quotes Jerome, "What Aaron and his sons and the Levites were in the temple, such are the Bishops, Presbyters and Deacons in the Christian Church." Now Jerome died in the year 420; he lived at a time when the Church had fallen from its original purity, and had begun to "teach for doctrines the commandments of men." Evidently Jerome was then engaged as Mr. Ward is now in offering an apology for the Episcopal heresy, to which the Church had not yet become wholly reconciled. This shows us that Mr. W. claims that his Church is modelled after the Jewish Temple,—the Bishop taking the place of the High Priest. How does this comport with Paul's teaching in the 9 and 10th of Hebrews: let us see.—"But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is to say not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." Heb. ix, 11 and 12. "And for this cause he (Christ) is the mediator (or priest) of the New testament." Heb. ix, 15. "But this man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God." Heb. x. 12. A careful perusal of the 9th and 10th chapters of Hebrews and cognate passages will convince the reader that Christ himself is the "high priest" of the Christian Church, notwithstanding what "Jerome" or Mr. Ward may say to the contrary. What are we to say, then, of those who thus sacrilegiously and blasphemously usurp the place and assume the title of our "High Priest," who "hath passed into heaven now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix, 24.

Now, Mr. Editor, it would be obviously impractical for me to attempt in one article to fully dispose of and confute the numerous and glaring blunders into which Mr. Ward has fallen in his last essay; as your space will not allow of this at present, neither have I had the time to do so; but during the ensuing weeks I shall, if spared, do so, to that gentleman's entire satisfaction.

Mr. Ward need not suppose that this question can be settled by a mere wave of the hand, or an oracular nod of the head, however learned or pretentious. I now close part I of my reply.

WM. BROWN.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

From the O. S. Advertiser.

At the summer meeting of Grey Division Grange, held at Annan on 7th July, the following reports of committee were read. The Annan ladies entertained the officers and members in the Drill Shed with a sumptuous dinner, and such a tea as Annan Ladies are famed for getting up on short notice.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CO-OPERATION.

Your Committee on Co-operation beg to report as follows:

Your committee did not carry out your suggestion of last meeting, believing the Fall to be the only time such undertakings can be successful by taken hold of, and if worked up long before the time for action, interest is likely to die out and the whole thing fall to the ground. Your committee proposed to meet about October and examine Bro. Hope's papers and mature a scheme to submit to the Grange when action is likely to be taken. Your committee would also advise patrons more generally to use their present means of co-operation, believing if they attended the meetings of the sub-granges and fully recounted their experience in farming, and heartily endeavored to cultivate a more sociable feeling among farmers, they would co-operate more to one another's advancement than by going into store keeping. Your committee believe the committee appointed by the Dominion Grange to correspond with co-operative societies in Great Britian is a step in the right direction and likely to prove highly beneficial. All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) H. Pamey, D. McLean, J. Long, A. Gifford.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SEED GRAIN.

Your Committee on Seed Grain beg leave to submit the following report. Your committee reiterate the belief that to obtain the best results seeds should be changed every two years, not only from one class of soil to another, but locality should be changed as well, we believe that a change of soil as well as a change of locality is beneficial to the success of a full crop: we also believe that although the fall wheat has been a partial failure, we would recommend patrons to get the best seed that can be got and prepare the soil thoroughly, and sow in good time and trust in Providence for the result, sow as early as the first of September. Should any of the patrons have any new varieties your committee would recommend them to report.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

David Armstrong, Chairman.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

We, your committee on Domestic [illegible] beg leave to report.

The subject of Domestic Economy we feel to be a subject of so great importance that it would require much more consideration than in the limited time at our disposal we are enabled to give it, especially as it has been [illegible] all the members of the Grange at the dinner table [illegible] provided for us by our [illegible] Grange. We [illegible] recommend that in each of our [illegible] a half hour at least [illegible] essays, recitations and music, &c., as altogether too [illegible] of the time in the homes of our [illegible] with work to the [illegible] of those matters which would be a great benefit to us both [illegible] morally, we would suggest that an essay be written to read at the next meeting of the Division Grange, in which the subject can be [illegible] to better advantage.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

[illegible] Mrs. Long, A. Gifford, P. Christie, H. Reid.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON STOCK.

Your committee beg leave to report that the Durham breed of cattle is the most profitable stock you can raise on a farm for dairy purposes is the general opinion of your committee.

2nd. As regards the different kinds of sheep we have arrived at the conclusion that the Leicester and Cotswold are the most profitable we can raise on a farm.

3rd. We are of the opinion as regards pigs, for profit the full bred Berkshire.

4th. Your committee also believe that the sooner stock is matured for either old country or home market the better, and the more attention that is paid to the breeding of stock from full blooded sires the more will those engaged find it a good and profitable investment.

(Signed) G. Harkness, Chairman.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND LOANING.

Your Committee on Banking and Loaning have nothing of interest to convey to the Grange since our last meeting on the subject of banking.

The subject of an Agricultural Bank now occupies the attention of the Executive Committee of the Dominion Grange, and the necessity for such an institution has been endorsed, but your committee are not aware of any recent action in connection with the organization of such an institution.

Your Committee learn that the Grange Trust has increased the capital stock of the Company to $2,000,000 by having secured supplementary letters patent with a view of more fully carying out the principles of cooperation by allowing borrowers to participate in profits. The directors are taking steps to organise a Board of Reference in Great Britian, whose principal duty it will be to bring prominently before the attention of capitalists the special features of this company, and secure money at the lowest possible rate for investment among our brethern, who in common with other farmers have in years past paid high rates of interest. The influence of the company for good it is believed will be very great indeed, its influence already having been observable.

In short, your committee hope that the Grange Trust, The first Co operative Loaning Company in Canada, will be productive of very great good to the members of the Grange.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) R. J. Doyle, H. Reid.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MUNICIPAL LAW AMENDMENTS.

We, your Committee on Municipal Law Amendments beg to submit the following:

1st. Your Committee regret very much that no action has yet been taken towards the abolition of Market Fee provisions, we find that in accordance with your instructions the Secretary forwarded to the Government, also to Messrs. Creighton, Lander and Waters a memorial duly signed and sealed, praying that the power to impose Market Fees be withdrawn from Corporations, and would suggest that this meeting instruct the Master and Secretary to again petition as before, such petition to be forwarded some time before the close of the present year.

2nd. Respecting a change in County Councils your committee hold the same view as that express by your commitee of last year, viz.: the work could be much better done by a Board of Commissioners chosen as explained in that report, and which would cost but a fraction of the present system. But we would advise that this and other important matters such as the assessment laws, &c., be left in abeyance until we secure attention to our wants in the question of Market Fees, in the meantime to carefully digest those questions and ascertain what will best meet our requirements. We would recommend that the provisions of the Herd Law be extended and some means provided for enforcing it. All of which is respectfully submitted,

J. Bowes, M. Denton, A. Gifford. R. A. Stark.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON HORTICULTURE.

Your Committee on Horticulture beg to report as followes:

1st. That your committe regret that the fruit crop in this division has been seriously damaged by late frosts, which appears to have been sectional to a certain extent. Your Committee would strongly urge upon Patrons of Husbandry to under drain their orchards and gardens, which may be considered the most effectual preventative from injury by frosts, as also of securing the best results in many other respects. Your Committee are strongly impressed with the fact that it is difficult to find any locality in Canada where the apple, pear and plum will succeed better than Grey Division. Much, however, depends on the varities planted. Your committee would strongly recommend planting for market purposes of but few varities, as the tendency is to planting too many varieties of fruit, much of which is unfit for shipping and must of necessity be less remunerative. Plums. Those only which ripen slowly and which can be shipped to a foreign market should be grown for market. We would especially mention the following varities of pears as those which have been the most generally successful in this section, the order of merit being the order in which named: Flemish Beauty (standard); Bartlett (standard); Dearborn's Seedling (dwarf); Duchesse d' Angoulême (dwarf); Vicar of Wakefield (dwarf). Your committee are of opinion that the late ripening varities of plums are much more profitable than those ripening early, as the former varieties arrive in market at a time when their is not much fruit offering for sale. All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. J. Doyle,
R. Harkness.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON IMPLEMENTS.

Your Committee on Implements beg leave to report as follows:

From the fact that the time given your Committee is so short that they have not been able to present as full a report as they would wish. They find also quite a diversity of opinion in regard to some of the implements recommended, but from some particular advantages recommend the following as generally satisfactory: The Harvest Queen Reaper, Toronto Mower, Tiger Rake, Noxon Bros. Combined Drill and Broadcast Seeder (although we consider the price charged for seeders exorbitant). The Spring Tooth Harrow is considered the best harrow for rough land. The question of a perfect pea harvester was discussed by your committee, but they not having any personal experience in the matter would beg leave to refer any member wishing information to Mr. W. Keefer, Annan, who is agent for the Tolton Pea Harvester, which is claimed to cut 8 acres per day, which would be a great saving both in time and money compared with the present slow and laborious method. Herewith is appended a price list of articles manufactured by D. Christie, Esq., Owen Sound:—Harvest Queen Reaper, $100; Tiger Rake, $24; Gang Plough, $18; Grain Crusher, $25; Scufflers, $7.50 to 12; Fanning Mills, $24; Rollers, $28; Common Plough, $7 to $30. A reduction of 10 per cent. will be made from the above if ordered by the dozen. Your committee would also recommend that members patronize our home industries where it is practicable, but when obliged to order from a distance that they do so through Mr. Harris, agent Grange Supply Co., Toronto. All of which is respectfully submitted.

Rob't Walker, S. Edmonstone
H. Reid.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS ON KISSING.

The subjoined opinions on kissing relate to the text which tells us that "Jacob kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice and wept."

If Rachel was a pretty girl and kept her face clean, we can't see what Jacob had to cry about.—Daily Telegram.

How do you know but that she slapped his face for him.—L. Y. M. C. A. News.

The cause of Jacob's weeping was the refusal of Rachel to allow him to kiss her again.—Nonconformist.

It is our opinion that Jacob wept because he had not kissed Rachel before, and wept for the time lost.—National Reformer.

The fellow wept because Rachel told him to do it again, and he was afraid.—Methodist Recorder.

Jacob cried because she threatened to tell her mother.—Christian World.

Jacob wept because there was only one Rachel to kiss.—Southport News.

A mistake. Not his eyes but his mouth watered.—Chester Chronicle.

Our opinion is that Jacob wept because he found that it was not what it was cracked up to be.—Manhattan Examiner and Times.

Jacob thought it was a fast color, and wept to find the color come off.—Fine Art Gazette.

He was a fool. He did not know what was good for him.—Saturday Review.

Jacob wept because Rachel bit his lip.—Peterboro Review.

Jake did not weep any tears, he only cried with a loud voice, yum! yum!—Toronto Mail.

Yes he wept; his cheeks were streaked with tears when he swotted her and thought of the ring as he saw in the future the calves he had herd of, fearing some one would La-ban upon his marriage. (See Gen. 30, xxix 29, xxvi.)—L. V. Journal.

Jacob wept because he found on kissing Rachel she had been eating onions.—Dundalk Herald.

Couldn't be that Jacob wept for getting what is acknowledged to be the height of human bliss. Perhaps the new revision that is now in progress will throw some light on the subject.—Markdale Standard.

A DREAM.

I sat by the railway station,
And I fell into a dream,
I dreamt I was in Proton,
Before it received its name,
And as I stood in the wild-wood,
I heard the howl and the scream,
Of wolves in the swamps of Proton,
And I was afraid in my dream—
But Proton's swamps and Melancthon's,
Appear to be all the same,
And no one knew of their pathways,
Save he of the copper stain;
I trembled on seeing the wild-cat,
And ran when I heard her scream;
And when I awoke, the engine
Was blowing off her steam;
But the day was calm and sultry,
(I waited the "evening train,")
My ears grew deaf to the engine,
And I was asleep again.
Me thought I rode with a teamster,
Through mud, on a heavy load,
Who told me they called the high-way
"Toronto and Sydenham Road."
I saw the men of this township
Come into it one by one,
And saw them endure those hardships
That to the forest belong:
Their roads were nothing but pathways—
House—ill looking and small—
Still they were joyous and happy,
In spite of the hardships all.
I saw them go to the market,
They seemed to be proud two own,
A sleigh with a team of oxen
To bear their purchases home.
And as I traveled the wild-wood
The oxen began to roar,
And starting up from my slumber
My dream again was o'er;
But closing again my eyelids
The vision returned once more:
But I was not in the city,
Whose magnitude vexed me sore,
Whose streets were longer and straighter
Than streets familiar to me—
Buildings—more splendid and greater,
Than I was accustomed to see—
But as I travelled its sidewalks
The mystery passed away,
I found on reading the sign-boards
That city's our "Dundalk" to-day.

J. C. W.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

CHAPTER I.

THE large, loud-voiced clock over the stables struck nine, and announced to all whom it might concern that the breakfast hour of Sir John Dangerfield, Baronet of Scarswood Park, Sussex, had arrived.

Scarswood Park! A glorious old place, lying deep down in the green heart of a Sussex woodland! A glorious old place, where the rare red deer disported amid the emerald glades, and dusky, leafy aisles of the oak and beech! A vast and stately park, sloping down to the tawny sea-shore, and a vast odd stately mansion, its echoing turrets rising high above the towering oak and copper beeches, and its eastern windows sparkling in the red sunlight of this bright September morning like sparks of fire.

Within and without the great house all was still; a breakfast table, sparkling with crystal, rich and rough old silver, gay with tall glasses of September roses, and snowy with napery, stood ready and waiting in a spacious room.

Through the open windows the sweet, hay-scented morning wind blew, and far off you caught in the summer stillness the soft wash of the waves on the yellow sands, more than a mile away.

At the last chime of the loud-voiced clock the door opened, and Sir John Dangerfield came into the room. A silver-toned French time-piece on the marble mantel began a twinkling waltz, preparatory to repeating the hour; the birds, in their gilded cages sang blithely their welcome; but the baronet glanced impatiently around in search of something or somebody else.

'Not down yet,' he said. 'That's not like Katherine! She is not used to dissipation, and I suppose last night's concert has made her lazy this morning. Thomas,—to a footman, appearing like a tall plush spectre in the doorway—tell Miss Katherine's maid that I am waiting for breakfast. Has the Times arrived?'

'Yes, Sir John.'

Thomas presented the folded Thunderer to his master and vanished.

Sir John Dangerfield flung himself into an easy-chair, that groaned in every joint with his three hundred pounds of manhood, and opened the damp London paper, perfuming the room with the smell of printers' ink. He was a tall, portly gentleman, this Sussex baronet, with a handsome, florid face, and an upright, military bearing. For three months only had he reigned master of Scarswood; three lives had stood between him and the baronetcy, and, a colonel in the Honourable East India Company's Service, he had, four months before this sunny September morning, about as much idea of lording it in Scarswood Hall as he had of ever sitting on the throne of England. Suddenly, as if a fatality were at work, these three lives had been removed, and Colonel Dangerfield, of Her Majesty's H. E. I. C. S., became Sir John Dangerfield, of Scarswood Park, and, with his daughter and heiress, came back to England for the first time in fifteen years. He was a widower, and Miss Dangerfield, his daughter, his heiress, his idol, had been born in England, and was two years old when her father had first gone out to India, and grown up nearly seventeen before she ever set foot on English soil again.

He unfolded his paper, but he did not read. The loud singing of the birds, the dazzling brightness of the summer morning, disturbed him, perhaps. It dropped on his knee, and his eyes turned on the emerald lawn, on the tangled depths of fern and bracken, on the dark expanse of waving woodland—terraces, lawn, and copse—all bathed in the glorious golden light.

'A fair prospect,' he said—'a princely inheritance! And to think that four months ago I was grilling alive in Calcutta, with no earthly hope but that of retiring some day from the Company's service with chronic liver complaint and a colonel's half-pay. For myself it would not matter; but for Katherine!' His face changed suddenly. 'If I could only be certain she were dead! If I could only be certain my secret was buried with her! It never mattered before—we were out of her reach; but since my accession to Scarswood, since my return to England, that wretch's memory has haunted me like an evil spirit. Only last night I dreamed of her—dreamed I saw her evil black eyes gleaming upon me in this room. Pagh!'

A shudder of disgust—a look of abhorrence; then he lifted the paper again—and again he dropped it.

A door far above closed with a bang; a fresh young voice, carolling like a bird; the quick patter, patter, patter, of little female feet downstairs—the last three cleared with a jump; and then the door of the breakfast-room was flung wide, and the heiress of Scarswood Park flashed into the room.

Flashed—I use the word advisedly—flashed in like a burst of sunshine—like a hillside breeze—and stood beside her father in fluttering white muslin, pink ribbon, waving, brown hair flying, grey eyes dancing and her fresh, sweet voice ringing through the room.

'Good morning, papa!' Miss Dangerfield cried, panting and out of breath. 'Is breakfast ready? I'm perfectly famished, and would have starved to death in bed if Ninon had not come and routed me out. And how is your appetite, papa?—and I hope I have not kept you waiting too long—and, oh! wasn't the concert perfectly de—licious last night!'

And then two white arms went impetuously around the neck of the Indian officer, and two fresh rosy lips gave him a kiss that exploded like a tornado.

Sir John disengaged himself laughingly from this impulsive embrace.

'Gently, gently, Kathie! don't quite garrot me with those long arms of yours. Stand off and let me see how you look after last night's dissipation. A perfect wreck, I'll be bound.'

'Dissipation! A perfect wreck! Oh, papa, it was heavenly—just that! I shall never forget that tenor singer—who sang Fortanio's song, you know, papa, with his splendid eyes, and the face of a Greek god. And his name—Gaston Dantree—beautiful as himself. Don't talk to me of dissipation and a wreck; I mean to go again to-night, and tomorrow night, and all the to-morrow nights while those concerts are given by the Talbots.'

She stood before him, gesticulating rapidly, with the golden morning light pouring full on her face.

And Miss Katherine Dangerfield, heiress and heroine, was beautiful, you say, as an heiress and heroine should be? I am sorry to say No. The young ladies of the neighborhood, otherwise English misses with pink and white complexions, and perfect manners, would have told you Katherine Dangerfield was lanky and overgrown, had sunburnt hands and complexion, too small a nose, and too large a mouth and chin. Would have told you her forehead was low, her complexion sallow, and her manners perfectly horrible. She was boisterous, she was a hoyden, she said whatever came uppermost in her mind, was utterly spoiled by a doting father and had the temper of a very termagant. They would probably have forgotten to mention—these young ladies—that the sallow complexion was lit by a pair of the loveliest dark-gray eyes, that the tall, supple figure of seventeen gave rare promise of stately and majestic womanhood, that the ever ready smile with parted the rosy lips displayed a set of teeth flashing like jewels.

They would have forgotten to mention the wonderful fall of bright brown hair, dark in the shadow, red gold in the light, and the sweet freshness of a voice so silver-toned that all who heard it paused to listen. Not handsome—you would never have called her that—but bright, and blithe as the summer sunshine itself.

'Well, papa, how do I look? Not very much uglier than usual, I hope. Oh, papa,' the girl cried, suddenly clasping her hands, 'why why, why wasn't I born handsome? I adore beauty—pictures, music, sunshine, flowers, and—handsome men! I hate women—I hate girls—vain, malicious magpies—spiteful and spiritless. Why don't I look like you, papa,—you handsome, splendid old soldier? Why was I born with a yellow skin, an angular figure and more arms and hands than I ever know what to do with? Whom do I take after to be so ugly, papa? Not after you, that's clear. Then it must be after mamma?'

Miss Dangerfield had danced over to the great mirror on the mantel, and stood gazing discontentedly at her own image in the glass.

Sir John, in his sunny window-seat, had been listening with an indulgent smile, folding his crackling paper. The crackling suddenly ceased at his daughter's, and the smile died wholly away.

'Say, papa,' Katherine cried, impatiently, 'do I look like mamma? I never saw her, you know, nor her picture, nor anything. If I do, you couldn't have been over and above particular during the period of love's young dream. Do I inherit my tawny complexion, and square chin, and snub nose, and low forhead, from the late Mrs. Colonel Dangerfield?'

Her father laid down his paper, and arose.

'Come to breakfast, Katherine,' he said, more coldly than he had ever spoken to her before in his life, 'and be kind enough to drop the subject. Your flippant manner of speaking of—of your mother, is positively shocking. I am afraid it is true what they say of you here—Indian nurses, the lack of a mother's care, and my indulgence, have spoiled you.'

'Very well, papa; then the fault's yours and you shouldn't blame me. The what's-his-name cannot change his spots, and I can't change my [illegible] any more than I can my looks. But really and truly papa, do I look like mamma?'

'No—yet—I don't know.'

'No—yes—I don't know.' Intelligible, perhaps, but not satisfactory. When I am left a widow, I hope I shall remember how the dear departed partner of my existence looked even after thirteen years. Have you no portrait of mamma, then?'

'No! In Heaven's name, Katherine, eat your breakfast, and let me eat mine.'

'I am eating my breakfast,' responded his daughter testily. 'I suppose a person can talk and eat at the same time. Haven't you rather got a pain in your temper this morning, papa? And I must say I think it a little too hard that I can't be told who I take my ugliness from. I'm much obliged to them for the inheritance, whoever they were.'

Sir John again laid down his paper with a resigned sigh. He knew of old how useless it was to try and stem the current of his daughter's eloquence.

'What nonsense you talk my dear,' he said, 'You're not ugly—you don't want compliments Katherine? I thought your cousin Peter paid you enough last night to satisfy even your vanity for a month.'

Katherine shook her head impatiently until all its red-brown tresses flashed again.

'Peter Dangerfield—wretched little bore! Yes, he paid me compliments, with his hideous little weasen face close to my ear until I told him for goodness sake to hold his tongue, and not drive me frantic with his idiotic remarks! He let me alone after that, little grinning imbecile will be asking me to marry him one of these days—mark my words!'

'Very well—suppose he does?' The baronet leaned back in his chair and raised his paper nervously before his face. 'Suppose he does, Kathie—what then?'

'What then!' The young lady could but just repeat the words in her amaze and indignation. 'What then! Sir John Dangerfield—do you mean to insult me, sir? Put down that paper this instant, and look the person you're talking to full in the face, and repeat "what then," if you dare.'

'Well, Kathie,' the baronet said, still fidgeting with his paper screen and not looking his excited little commanding officer in the face, 'Peter's not handsome I know, nor dashing, but he's a clever little fellow, and my nephew, and in love with you. and will make you a much better husband, my dear, than a much better-looking man. Handsome men are always vain as peacocks, and so deeply in love with themselves that they never have room in their conceited hearts and empty heads to love any one else. Don't be romantic, my dear—you'll not find heroes anywhere now except in Mudie's novels. Peter's a clever little fellow, as I said, and over head and ears in love with you.'

'A clever little fellow! A clever little fellow,' repeated Miss Dangerfield, with intense concentrated scorn. 'Papa,' with dignity, 'a few minutes ago you told me to change the subject. I make the same remark now. I wouldn't mary your clever little fellow not to save my own head from the gallows or his soul from perdition. Sir John, I consider myself doubly insulted this morning! I don't wonder you sit there excruciating my nerves with that horrid rattling paper and ashamed to look me in the face. I think you have reason to be ashamed! Telling your only child and heiress she couldn't do better than throw herself away on a pitiful little country lawyer, only five feet high, and with the countenance of a rat. If it were that adorable Gaston Dantree now. Oh, here's the post. Papa! papa! give me the key.'

Miss Dangerfield, forgetting in a second the late outrage offered her by her cruel parent seized the key, unlocked the bag, and plunged in after its contents.

'One—two—three—four! two for me from India—one for you from ditto, in Major Trevanion's big slap-dash fist. and this—Why, papa, what lady correspondent can you have in Paris? What an elegant Italian hand! what thick yellow perfumed paper, and what a sentimental seal and motto! Blue wax and "pensez a moi." Now, papa, who can this be from?'

She threw the letter across the table. With her first words the face of the Indian officer had changed—a hunted look of absolute terror had come into his face.

His hands tightened over the paper, his eyes fixed themselves upon the dainty missive his daughter held before them, his florid healthy color faded—a dull, grayish whiteness crept over his face from brow to chin.

'Papa!' Katherine cried, 'you're sick, you're going to have a fit. Drink this—drink it this moment and come round.'

She held a glass of water to his lips. He obeyed mechanically, and the color that had faded and fled, slowly crept back to his bearded, sun-browned face. 'There,' said Miss Dangerfield, in a satisfied tone, 'you have come round. And now tell me, was it a fit, or was it the letter? Tell me the truth, sir, dont prevaricate!'

'It was one of my old attacks, Kathie, nothing more. You ought to be used to them by this time. Nothing more, I give you you my word. Go back to your breakfast, child,' he said, testily, 'and don't stand staring there in that uncomfortable way.'

'My opinion is, papa,' replied Miss Dangerfield, with graverty, 'that you're in a bad way, and should turn your attention immediately from the roast beef of old England to water gruel and beef tea. A fine old English gentleman of your time of day, who has left his liver behind him in India, and who has a Sepoy bullet lodged fast in his left lung, and a strong tendency to apoplexy besides, ought to mind what he eats and drinks, and be on very friendly terms with the nearest clergyman. Aren't you going to read that letter, papa, and tell me who the woman is who has the assumption to write to you without my knowledge? No, where are you going?' for Sir John had risen hastily, his letters in his hands:

'To my study, Kathie. Finish your breakfast, darling, and don't mind me.' He stooped down suddenly and kissed her, with almost passionate tenderness. 'My darling,' he said, 'Heaven bless and keep you always, whatever happens—whatever happens.

He repeated the last word with a sort of anguish in his voice, then turned and walked out of the breakfast parlor before his very much amazed daughter could speak.

'Well,' exclaimed Miss Dangerfield at last, 'this does cap the universe, doesn't it?' This question being addressed to vacancy received no reply. 'There's a mystery here, and I don't like mysteries out of sensation novels. I have no secrets from papa—what business has papa to have secrets from me?'

She arose with an injured air, gave the bell a vicious pull, and walked in offended dignity back to her room. The broad, black, shapely oaken staircase went up in majestic sweeps to the regions above. Miss Dangefield ascended it slowly and with a face of perplexed thought.

'It was never an attack—don't tell me—it was that nasty, vicious, spidery written little letter, and what business had she to write it?' I shall insist upon papa giving me a full explanation at dinner-time. No woman in Paris or any other wicked city shall badger my precious old soldier into an early grave. And meantime I shall have a gallop on Ilderim over the golden Sussex medows.

She entered her room singing the song the handsome tenor had sung at the concert the night before, the melody of whose silver voice, the dusky fire of whose eyes, the dark foreign beauty of whose face had haunted her romantic seventeen-year-old mind ever since.

'How handsome he was—how handsome—how handsome, If ever I marry, it shall be a man—a demi-god like that. Peter Dangerfield, indeed!—Nasty little bore. Still I would rather have him in love with me than have none at all. I wonder if it is I, myself, he loves, or Scarswood Park, and the heiress of eight thousand a year. Ninon! my green riding habit, and tell them to fetch Ildrem around. And oh, Ninon, my child, tell that tiresome groom I don't want him perambulating behind me like an apoplectic shadow. Ildrem and I can take care of ourselves.

IS IT POSSIBLE.—That a remedy made of of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do? It must be, for when old and young, rich and poor, Pastor and Doctor, Lawyer and Editor, all testify to having been cured by them, we must believe and doubt no longer.—Post.

A TRIP FROM MARKDALE TO TORONTO BY THE NARROW GAUGE,

Left the station on the 7th bright and early on an excursion to the Exhibition. Arrived at Flesherton station about 6 a, m. without hap or accident. Before reaching Shelburne, however, the engine gave out; having taken a rest and a drink in the big swamp, and having been mended, it started away with us to Shelburne, whence a delay of about an hour was necessary for repairs. When all things were got in readiness, we steamed off and arrived at Orangeville at 10.05 a. m.. There we had to repair and wait for the train from the west, whose enfine ran short of water. We started however at 11.40, so that our delay was only one hour and thirty-five minutes.

From this out we sped along gaily till we arrived at the next watering place. The smoke kept every body on board in mind of the fact that they had eyes and noses, to which they must attend above all other things; hence the news boy's peaches and pears were at a discount. The hills in the distance seemed to be twice the ordinary height. This strange appearance is supposed to be owing to the great volume of smoke held in the atmosphere. The air being thus denser than ordinary, causes a refraction of the light, so that any object in the distance appears elevated. The phenomenon is well known to sailors, and they call it looming. It is rarely noticed inland, yet in hilly parts it may be observed quite distinctly before or after a change of weather. It is owing to a particular state of the atmosphere, and is a species of mirage.

During all our delays we felt quite happy. We were rather a social crew, gathered principally from from the neighboring villages of Markdale, Flesherton, Priceville and Dundalk.—There being a large number of cars, the people from each village could occupy places by themselves. There was, however, quite an interchange of positions as well as of opinions.—Nearly all the professions and occupations of the country were well represented, Yet we missed one couple who had been made happy that morning. We wished them much joy and were looking for them in the train coming behind.

By the way it was commonly reported aboard, that a prominent member of the township fathers when in Council on the dark Monday was so over-awed by the appearance of the heavens, that when discussing the repairs of a certain piece of road, he advised his brethren that it was time for him and them to give up the care of sublunary things, and prepare for another road. If men leave their preparation till such signs appear, they will have a hard road to travel. Other people were also scared. Your correspondent "M." is good at giving advice on these subjects; perhaps you better ask him to give these weak worldlings a lesson or a lecture on dark days through your columns.—There is a story told of a Yankee Senate having once been overtaken with a dark day. A faint-hearted member moved to adjourn the house because, in his opinion, the world was coming to an end. Another honorable member opposed the motion, "Because," said he, "if it is the day of judgment I desire to be found at my post doing my duty, and if it is not the day of judgment no member of the house need be afraid, therefore I move in amendment, that the lamps be lit, and the house proceed with the discussion." It need hardly be added that the amendment was carried.

All on board enjoyed themselves, and well they might. They left home for that purpose, and it would be their own fault if they made themselves miserable by any regrets. All the train hands were exceedingly obliging and patient. There was one place where there patience and good nature were put to the test very severely.—When the engine broke down in the middle of a swamp, they had to turn out with crowbars, cold chisels, hammers, axes and blocks of wood, to fix the venerable mas of iron. Here the men were soon surrounded by a crowd of staring, gaping pleasure seekers, all apparently curious to learn something about the construction of a steam engine or cow-catcher. and many of them passing such remarks as they thought clever. Now it is very hard on human nature to be gazed at and made a butt of for the remarks of those who are standing idle, especially when one is working hard and faithfully at unpleasant work for the good of those very spectators. Yet these good men took all in the calmest, happiest mood, and the jolly engineer seemed to have all his men under complete control. and thoroughly trained to make the best of their few advantages in an emergency. When all things were got ready the passengers began to discuss the merits of the road, and they all came to the conclusion that it would be a great pity if the Grand Trunk or any other company would get it, as the probability was that in such a case all these hands would all be dismissed and strangers put in their places. Every one knew that it was not the fault of any body that we were delayed, but simply that the engine got a little out of sorts. All aboard that day will hail with satisfaction the news that the Narrow Gauge is to become a Broad Guage, and is to be run as an independent road. The Grand Trunk would make us hewers of wood and drawers of water to their main line.

At Woodbridge when going up the hill our old horse took anotion that his load was too heavy, but instead of refusing to pull, he applied all his strength, broke the harness, and went off to the next station with only one car, leaving us all to our fate. We might either roll back into the hollow, or down brakes and remain where we were. He returned, however, in about 20 minutes, hooked on to the remaining cars and took us all safely into the city, where we arrived at 3.30 p. m.. Although we were five hours behinn time, no one was any the worse for having left home so early in the morning, prepared to have a pleasant time of it come what might.

The Exhibition was well worth going to see, were it for nothing else than for arrangement of the grounds; but besides this there were so many things of interest that one could spend the whole ot the two weeks there with pleasure and profit. DOMINIE.

SOMETHING IN THE BED.

Judge Pitnam has a habbit of slipping his watch under his pillow when he goes to bed. One night, somehow, it slipped down, and as the judge was restless, it worked its way down towards the foot of the bed. After a bit, while he was lying awake, his foot touched it; it felt very cool; he was surprised, scared and jumped from the bed, said:

"By gracious, Maria, there's a toad or something under the covers; I touched it with my foot."

Mrs. Pitnam gave a loud scream, and was on the flour in an instant.

"Now don't get to hollering and waken the neighbors," said the judge. "You get me a broom or something and we'll fix the thing mighty quick."

Mrs. Pitnam got a broom and gave it to the judge, with the remark that she felt as if snakes were creeping up and down her legs and back.

"Oh, nonsense, Maria! Now turn down the covers slowely while I hold the broom and bang it. Put a bucket alongside the bed so we can shove it in and drown it."

Mrs. Pitnam fixed the bucket and gently removed the covers. The judge held the broom uplifted, and as the black ribbon of the silver watch was revealed, he cracked away at it three or four times with the broom, then he pushed the thing into the bucket, Then they took the light to investigate the matter. When the judge saw what it was, he said:

"I might have known—it is just like you women to go screeching and fussing about nothing. It's utterly ruined."

"It was you that made the fuss not me," said Mrs. Pitnam.

"You needen't try to put the blame on me;" then the judge turned in and growled at Maria until he fell asleep.

In a certain Welsh village it was customary to assemble the young people after service and enlighten their ignorances by chastising them; the subjects being generally drawn from a small manual entitled "Mother's Gift on Sunday Points of Scripture Doctorine,". After many comparitively easy questions put upon a Sabbath afternoon, came on which fairly puzzled the juveniles.

"What," asked the teacher, "are the wages of sin?"

There was considerable hesitation among the pupils, and an older lad being present the teacher turned to him and repeated the question:

"John, my lad, can you tell me what are the wages of sin?"

After a pause for consideration, John, with a glance of intelligence, replied:

"Well, sir, I canna tell for certain—but—what should you say to eighteen pence a day and find yourself?"

Two girls at Waupaca, Gregen, tossed up for a lover, and the looser acted as bridesmaid at the wedding. Two girls at Bowerton, Mich., instead of drawing lots, have amicably started for Utah with a lover in tow, expecting to enjoy what the lawyers would call each an undivided half of one husband.

Fifty thousand women are needed in Arizona at once, and no questions asked.—New Haven Register. Then they won't go. They want to emigrate to a place where there'll be one question asked.—Boston Post.

TORONTO EXHIBITION.

On Wednesday, 14th inst., your reporter got on board the cars for the City, with the intention of seeing the Exhibition, and having a good time generally. By the time we reached Dundalk, we began to be uncomfortably crowded, and upon reaching Orangeville there was hardly standing room even on the platforms. At Orangeville another passenger coach was attached to our train and was filled almost as soon as coupled. Then box cars were brought into requisition, and they also were soon filled. All went "merry as a marriage bell" until we were past Alton a short distance. Here the tender took to the sulks and left the rail. There was a difference in this case to the one mentioned by our correspondent, whose letter will be found on our first page, the passengers did not stand round gazing at the train hands, but went to work with a will to get the tender on the track again. After considerable labor we succeeded in getting it on again, but had gone only a few yards when the postal and express car followed the evil example of the tender. However we got off again, and met with no further mishap and arrived at the City close on 5 o'clock p.m., nearly two hours behind time. Upon reaching the City, our first thought was to secure a resting-place, which, from the crowded state of the hotels, was rather difficult to do. However, after wandering about until nearly 10 o'clock, we dropped into the Bull's Head, kept by Mr. J. B. Mullaney, No. 146 Niagara street, and would wish to stop at no better house. Mr. Mullaney is an old newspaper man, and of course your correspondent received every attention. Thursday, we visited the Exhibition.

To give an account in detail of all we saw would take up more space than you could spare.

The first thing that attracted our attention was McKelvey's cream gatherer. It is in our estimation the best thing of the kind we ever saw. In the same Hall we saw a cider press at work.

Our next visit was to the Machinery Hall. Here was every implement that a farmer requires, Reapers, Mowers, Self-binders, Threshing machines, Ploughs, Harrows, Sulky Rakes, &c., &c. If the usefulness of the implements exhibited were anything in comparison to their looks, they would all be first-class.

Waterous, of Brantford, had a grand display. They had a portable saw mill and grist mill at work on the grounds.

Haggart & Bros., Brampton, had an excellent display of Mowers, Reapers, Threshing machines, Portable engines, and a self-binder, which used either cord or wire, and appeared to do its work well.

Elliott & Son had a self-binder on the ground which used wire only, and the Osborn binder with cord, was also on exhibition.

The Stove room was the next place we visited. It was simply grand. The three principal exhibitors were the Oshawa Stove Company, McClary & Son. London, J. G. Strathern. The Oshawa Company had the largest exhibit, but in our opinion, McClary & Son's were, as far as workmanship was concerned, the best.

William Buck, of Brantford, showed a number of coal oil stoves, and to prove that they were capable of doing all he claimed for them, baking roasting and coffee-making was going on all through the day.

The poultry house was the next place to claim our attention. We think it is bad policy to have poultry exhibited at this season, as they are moulting, and consequently show to disadvantage. The exhibit however was good and of every imaginable variety, The ducks, we did not think much of. In fact we have seen better at County shows. The Turkeys were the finest we ever saw, as were also the geese.

We next went through the Horticultural Hall, and the sight that met our gaze was a sight not to be forgotten. Potatoes, Turnips, Carrots, Squashes, Mangles, and grain of every description. In this building the Muskoka district exhibited specimens of grain and roots; Sault Ste. Marie, grain, roots, and minerals; Manitoulin Island, grain, roots, minerals, and Indian work, The three above places received a Bronze Medal each. We then visited the butter and cheese factory which was working and turning out butter and cheese daily. In the butter department they churned three times a day, turning out 150 pounds of butter at each churning, From thence we directed our steps to the Main building, To give a description of what this building contained would occupy too much space, but will merely say that to go through it would amply repay the expense incurred in going to Toronto. The exhibit of cattle, though not as large as last year, was exceedingly good, as was that of sheep and pigs. Taking it all together the Exhibition was a grand success, and one of which Toronto might well be proud of. Of course, being newspaper man, we could not leave Toronto without paying the Mail and Globe offices a visit. In the latter office we happened to drop in just as the Evening News was going to press, and saw the whole process. It is wonderful the progress that has been made in printing in the past 30 years. Fifteen years ago, we were asked by a wool carder, who was looking at a steam press that was taking 1,500 impressions an hour, why presses could not be mahe to turn out papers as fast as rolls of wool were by a carding machine. We laughed at him, and told him it could never be done; but now the papers are printed on both sides, pasted, and folded at even a faster rate. Your readers may form some idea of the expense incurred in carrying on an establishment like the Mail or Globe when they are informed that the wages paid for the week we were there, in the type setting department alone, in the Mail was over $800.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

REPLY TO MR. WARD,—PART II.

WE entirely agree with Mr. Ward, that our Lord was very careful, both by precept and example, to impress upon his followers the necessity for due and proper authorization for the discharge of any sacred office in the Christian Church. Hence the visible descent of the Holy Ghost at His baptism, not to fit Him for His work, but to attest the divine nature of His mission, and to make this cognizable to the human senses; hence His oft repeated declaration, "As my Father hath sent me, so send I you," but we observe that Christ rarely, if ever afterwards, referred to this as evidence of His divine mission; it was "the works that I do they testify of me." When John Baptist sent two of his disciples to ask Jesus in reference to this, His reply was "Go show John those things which ye do hear and see, the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the deaf hear, the dead are raised to life, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them."

The immediate followers of Christ were commissioned not only to preach the Gospel but they were also endued with the power of working miracles; "as ye go, preach, saying the Kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give;" Matt., x, 7-8.

The other seventy were also endowed with like power, Luke x, 9-17, and we know from the subsequent record that the apostles exercised these miraculous gifts in attestation of their mission and we remark that this power of working miracles was the peculiar and special sign of apostleship.

"Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs and wonders and mighty deeds," 2 Cor. xii, 12.

"And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people," Acts, v, 12.

Paul healed a cripple at Lystra, Acts xiv, 10, see also Acts xix, 12—"The Lord gave testimony unto the word of his grace and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands," Acts xiv 3.

Will Mr. Ward claim that those whom he now calls apostles' successors are endowed with like gifts? If not why not? Let those who claim to be the apostles' successors show by working miracles that they are such in reality and they will end all cavil, or if they cannot do so let them honestly renounce such arrogant pretensions.

The apostles as such have no successors, and in the very nature of things it is impossible that they could have. One of the special qualifications of an apostle was that he had seen the Lord, Acts i, 21-22; an eye witness can have no successor, The apostolic office was extraordinary and temporary, was never designed to be perpetuated—the work of the apostles viz: founding and organising the church having been accomplished they passed away and left no "successors."

The same may be said of the evangelists, who were the apostles' assistants and delegates in organizing churches; such were Timothy and Titus and others who are honorably mentioned in the New Testament, whose sphere of duty was not confined to any particular congregation or place but extended throughout every province and country wherever a company of believers were found. If Bishops are the legitimate successors of the apostles, why, we ask, did they not take the name? Was it their excessive "modesty" which led them to steal the name of another order in the church, rather than take the name which, if their claim be just, rightly belonged to them?

The Rev. gentleman goes on to say, "Our Lord spent all the former part of His life in a private capacity doubtless to teach us that no internal qualification, no good end or intention can warrant a man's exercising any holy function without a divine commission." By "internal qualification" Mr. Ward evidently refers to the operation of God's spirit in the heart and soul of the individual and the call of the Holy Ghost to the work of the Gospel ministry, which is without "observation," and invisible to the carnal sense; this he thinks is of small importance compared with the ordination of an "Apostolic" successionist which he styles the "divine commission." Now this is precisely the position taken by the Church of Rome, it is also the position which the Romanizing party in Anglican church commonly called "Puseyites" take, and viewed in the light of reason, Scripture, and morality, no doctrine could be more repugnant to the cherished principles of Protestantism the world over.

According to this theory a man may be ever so scandalous or immoral in his life, he may be a blasphemer or an infidel yet if he is in the "succession" this is considered in Mr. Ward's estimation of greater value than any "internal qualification" though it should be accompanied with the purest and loftiest "end or intention" possible. With this theory or doctrine of "Apostolical succession" we shall take the liberty to deal more fully at some future time.

Mr. Ward proceeds—in the beginning of Christianity all those who officiated in divine matters received their commission either from Christ himself or from Apostolic hands."

Certainly, from what other source could they get their "commission" unless, perhaps, "Simon Magus" may have tried his hand to some purpose. "Paul and Barnabas ordained elders in every church which they planted," precisely so, and those elders were also called "Bishops" as we have before shown but we are not told that they ordained any other class of officers having a higher position or more exalted state in the church than the elders.

We ask your readers to note this fact particularly. Paul and Barnabas, the divinely inspired Apostles of our Lord, the founders and organizers of the infant Church, who ought to have known and who certainly did know what officers ought to preside over the little communities which they had gathered with so much toil and solicitude; "ordained elders in every church which they planted." Now, surely, if the Apostles had intended that there should be a class of officers in the church superior to the elders, they would not have neglected to appointed such superior officers, seeing that they had appointed the inferior? Are we to suppose that those eminent servants of God acting under the immediate inspiration and guidance of the Holy Ghost would have been guilty of such a dereliction of duty? Away with the thought!

Mr. Ward proceeds—"the other apostles used the same method as did also their successors after them, as is sufficiently evident from the Scripture and ancient history which abundantly proves the necessity of a divine commission &c." This sentence is somewhat involved and mixed, it shows that the writer had no very clear conception of what he wanted to say, or had already written. "Other apostles used the same method as did also their successors after them," that is "other apostles." "ordained elders in every church" as "Paul and Barnabas" had done, "so did their successors after them." Now this is just the point at issue—Where are these "successors"? Who are they apart from the "elders" who have been "ordained in every church?" Where do we find in the New Testament these "successors"? "As is sufficiently proved by Scripture and ancient history." We reply, Scripture proves no such thing and as for "ancient history," it proves that Episcopacy arose and gradually developed co-ordinately with the Apostacy which obscured and almost obliterated the once pure and undefiled Church of the Apostles. "Which abundantly proves the necessity of a divine commission." We presume this means that "Scripture and ancient history" prove the necessity of a "divine commission." We thought Rev. W. had proved the necessity of a "divine commission" from the Scripture, without the aid of "ancient history"—the gentleman is so full of history that he forgets what he had already written. We deny however that "ancient history" proves anything whatever about a "divine commission," and we challenge Rev. W. or anybody else to prove a "divine commission" outside of the Scriptures.

Mr. Ward proceeds: "It may be asked, who may be said to have this "divine commission"? he then answers this all important question in the following fashion, "We need not doubt to affirm that none but those who are ordained by such as are now commonly called bishops are have any authority to minister in the Christian Church. For that the power of ordination is solely lodged in that elder is proved from the institution of our Saviour and the constant practice of the Apostles."

Into this extraordinary statement we shall take the liberty to look very closely, we shall examine and compare the several passages of Scripture bearing on ordination therewith, and see how they agree.

That the Apostles were appointed by Christ himself and endowed with supernatural gifts we all of course admit.

About three years after the day of Pentecost we have the appointment of Deacons recorded—Acts vi, 1-6.

The brethren selected the men and the Apostles "ordained" them; these men were to attend to the secular work of the church and relieve the Apostles of that duty. The office to which they were ordained was simply to take charge of the funds of the poor and distribute them according to their best judgment. Of these seven men however, two at least were zealous and successful ministers of the Gospel viz: Stephen and Philip, and one of them baptized the Ethiopian eunuch although we are not told that either of them was ever ordained to preach or baptize. Ten or twelve years after the appointment of deacons we read for the first time in Acts xi, 30, of elders, but when, how, and by whom appointed is not recorded. Two years after this we read in Acts, xiv, 23 "and when they had ordained them elders in every church," here we have a plurality of elders or presbyters in each of the churches referred to. Some time after this we have an account in Acts. xv. 14, of the "Apostles and elders" being assembled in a council at Jerusalem to consider the question of "circumcision." This fact shows that the Apostles and elders were now associated for the government of the church.

After the lapse of other ten or twelve years or about 32 years after Pentecost, we meet with the word "Bishop" for the first time, in Paul's epistle to Titus, but not as implying an office distinct from that of elder or presbyter, but simply as a name given to a presbyter.

"For this cause left I thee in Crete that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordained elders in every city, as I appointed thee; If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children not accused of riot or unruly; for a bishop must be blameless as the steward of God &c." Here then we have a plurality of elders or presbyters or as they are now called bishops in the various churches of Crete. All the presbyters, in the Apostolic churches were bishops or oversers, and there were a plurality of them in each church, and in point of rank or dignity they enjoyed perfect equality. How does this accord with the practice in the Episcopal Church? In the first epistle to Timothy, which was written some time after the epistle to Titus, the word "bishop" occurs the second time. In this epistle we have an account of the ordination of Timothy: "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." Here then we have ordination by "presbytery," and we challenge Mr. Ward or anyone else to show from Scripture that Paul was present at all at Timothy's ordination though he possibly may have been, but if so he merely took part as a presbyter. Will Mr. Ward say that Timothy's ordination was not valid or that he "had no authority to minister in the Christian church" not having been ordained by "such as are now commonly called Bishops."

We ask your readers to note particularly this fact. The Apostle Paul tells us in the passage above quoted that Timothy was ordained "by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery" Mr. Ward says such an ordination is not valid, not having been performed by a bishop, and hence Timothy was merely an unauthorized pretender. Now, who is right. Mr. Ward or the divinely inspired Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles?

In the second epistle to Timothy we have another statement which Mr. Ward claims refers to ordination. "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." Had Timothy then two ordinations, one by the Presbytery and one by Paul himself? Certainly not. We challenge Mr. Ward to show that this latter passage refers to ordination at all. When Paul speaks of "stirring up the gift received by putting on his hands" he does not refer to the office of evangelist to which Timothy had been ordained by the "presbytery" but to a supernatural gift conferred on Timothy by the laying on of the apostle's hands, as in Acts, xix, 6: "And when Paul had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came on them and they spake with tongues and prophesied." To speak of "stirring up" a gift of this kind would be intelligible, but to speak of stirring up an office would be absurd.

From the foregoing it is clear that ordination by the presbytery is valid. New Testament ordination notwithstanding what Mr. Ward or the Apostolic successionists may say to the contrary.

In Acts xx, 17 we find that Paul on his journey sent from Miletus to Ephesus and "called the elders of the church" to confer with them, and in the course of his address the following expressions occur "Take heed therefore unto yourselves and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers," (the original word is Bishops) verse 28. Here then we see the two names, "elders" and "bishops" applied to the same class of officers; in other words presbyters are bishops, and bishops are presbyters, as we now use the names "pastor" or "minister" to the same individual.

The reason of these two names being given to the same order we shall give in our next, and now close part II.

MARKDALE, Sept. 26, 1881.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Sae "M" is at it again aboot the major tunes, and tries to brazen the thing oot in a lang screed aboot family and public worship. Nae wunner that it took him a hail fortnicht tae fash up sic a story. He professes tae think I couldna tell the distance from Markdale tae John O'Groats. Some folks think because they canna dae anything themsels, therefore nae ither ane can do't. The dottlin body! Man, sir, I've travelled ilka fit o't mysel, and could tell something aboot the Ablins, for some riggin o' his ain he wants to rin hoo far it is frae Markdale to the ither place, and expecks tae get it oot o' me. Dod but he's gie an' cunnin' after a'. But I'm thinking he's found his match for ance. Says Tibbie tae me, "Dinna tell him, Tammas. He is no tae be lippened till, wi' his havers aboot measuring tunes as if it was land surveying, an' speaking aboot scales an' keys an' moods, as if that had onything tae dae wi' singin'. I tauld ye last week he was sure tae be in a fearfu rage, an' noo you see for yoursel the mood he's in. He maun be either a Roman or an Episcopal or he wad ne'er speak as he does aboot the keys. If I was you, Tammas, I wad just pat him I the scales an' weight him till he's ashamed o' himsel." Weel, sir, I think Tibbi's advice is soond, as it generally is, an' I jest pat it tae you an' your readers, tae judge for yoursels the kind o' a chiel "M," is, wha speaks sae irreverently aboot singin' Bonnie Dundee i' the kirk or ut family worship. Noo, I've a great respeck for Robbie Burns, but I'm nae idolator, an' tho' Robbie an "M,," an' fifty thoosan' like them, wad recommen' Claversae—the black scoonrel—tae be honored in that way, I wadna do't, sir, an, nae mair wad Tibbie, nor ony God fearin' Christian, Timmer organs are made by the Almichty as weel as oor ain organs. We only pat them thegither. Then for why shouldna we use them. "M." says he is content tae praise wi' his lips. I can weel believe that o' him. Lip praise, ye ken! But it's praise frae the heart the Lord wants, as I said afore, "Tae sing wi' a lood noise joyfully." I'm thinkin' this will feenish "M." noo'.

PIC-NIC.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—As announced in your journal two weeks ago concerning this Pic Nic, to be held at No 5. R. C. S. S., Glenelg, came off on Wednesday 14th Inst., and proved a grand success. Owing to hurried time the multitude was small notwithstanding this $87 was realized. The weather, was as favorable as could be desired, and old King Sol favored us with his warming smiles on that day, to our hearts content. Much praise is due to our teacher, and to the Ladies and gents of the committee, and also to our trustworthy and honest treasurer, Mr. McAsey, arrangements they had made for the occasion on that day. The eatables provided by the Ladies of the Section were all that could be desired. The tables were laid with the choisest delacies of the season, which would have tempted the appetite of his Lordship the Marquis of Lorne. Much credit is due to that tallented and noble musician Mr. Joseph Maggett, for his able services rendered on the grounds on that day, as the soles of the Ladies and gents boots can testify who enjoyed themselves in the whirling maze of the light tripaze.

MR. EDITOR,—I mean to inform you through the columns of your valuable journal that Mr. Maurice Doolan was the hero of the day. The way he waited on the Ladies, old and young, in serving them with ginger pop and candies, for all know there was no Jamaca rum, you will excuse the writer for intruding so much of your space.

CHURCH RE-OPENING.

The re-opening of the Methodist Church of Canada in Dundalk was a decided success, On last Sabbath at 10.30, the Rev. Mr. Fish of Owen Sound, Chairman of the District, delivered an excellent sermon. At 2.30 p. m., the Rev. Mr. Eakin, Presbyterian Minister of Dundalk, delivered an able discourse. At 6.30, Mr. Fish again preached, delivering an instrucand and enthusiastic sermon, to perperhaps the largest congregation that has ever congregated in Dundalk.—Every available seat was occupied, which made the Trustees think for the first time that that they had not made the addition to the church large enough. We would not be surprized to see another enlargement of the same church within five years.

On Monday evening, the Harvest-Home Tea Meeting came off, and was a grand success. After tea, Mr. J. J. Middleton, Reeve of Proton, was appointed Chairman. After a few appropriate remarks by the Chairman, stating the object of the meeting, the Rev. Mr. Fish entered vigorously on the subject of liberality by subscription, and within the space of one hour the total sum of $331 was made up, which will pay off the entire debt on the church, build a drive-shed, and leave some for other improvements; after which the Chairman called upon the Rev. Mr. Eakin, Presbyterian Minister, Dunkdalk, who gave a short address, stating that the object of the meeting was successfully accomplished, and there was notoing left for him to do, as the entire dept was wiped off. The Rev. Mr. Philps of Flesherton, was next called upon, who gave a short speech, and filled the house with mirth; said that he was pleased to see the progress made in Dundalk.—After which the Rev. Mr. Fish was called upon, who gave a short and interesting account of the present and futuer of Dundalk, stating that he was pleased to see the progress and improvements that have been going on in our village since he was in it last, and complemented our citizens for their energy, and prophesied great things for us in the future.

The church choir rendered most excellent service on the occasion. Miss Lamon presided at the organ. The Rev. A. Potter, pastor of the church, was present and active on the occasion and we are sure he was much pleased with the success of the entire proceed ings.

Dr. Carson never claimed for his Stomach and Constipation Bitters any MIRACULOUS POWER OF HEALING, but with the quiet consciousness of their medicinal virtues he prescribes them to all those who suffer from derangement of the Stomach, Bowels Liver and Kidneys. In large 8 oz. bottles. at 50 centts. A. TURNER & Co, special agent for Markdale.

DISASTROUS FIRE.

$25,,000 WORTH OF PROPERTY DESTROYED AT COLLINGWOOD.

COLLINGWOOD, Sept. 25.—About 4 oclock this afternoon the fire bell rang an alarm, and fire was seen issuing from the premises occupied by J. W. Carey as a boot and shoe store and shop. The adjoining building, occupied by P. W. Bell & Co., was soon enveloped in flames, which quickly extended to Guilfoyle Bros. on the south and to the verandah in front of T. Long & Bro. on the north. Long's grocery, which was a frame building, was quickly consumed, and their magnificent four storey brick building soon succumbed to the flames. W. J. Frame's store was the next, and the fire rapidly extended to W. Leary's building, occupied by T. Best as a gents' furnishing store and W. A. Hogg as a printing office and book store. The store of Melville, Fair & Co., next took fire, and on it the exertions of the fire brigade were now concentrated, and the engine played steadily on it without any seeming effect for a long time, as it had a Mansard roof, and it seemed impossible to get the water to reach to the fire, which had got between the upper ceiling and roof, but finally they succeeded in stoping the flames in that direction. In the meantime.

THE FIRE WAS EXTENDING RAPIDLY.

south and east, the buildings to the south of Long Bros, being all of wood, with the exception of a stone dwelling belonging to C. Cameron, and unoccupied, which was completely destroyed. The confectionery store of Foreman & Sons, the grocery of R. W. O'Brien, Cooper's watchmaker's shop, Sheffield's restaurant, Patton's boot and shoe shop, and Archer's grocery were all consumed together with all the storehouses and premises in the rear. The heat was so intense that it set fire to three or four wooden buildings on the opposite side of Hurontario street, which is ninety-nine feet wide, and they were soon consumed. They were owned by T. Long & Bro. and B. Callary, and occupied respectively by Perritt, tin shop, Broughton, saddler, Anderson & Co., hardware, Miss Storey, boots and shoes, and Chellew, cabinetware. The fire then extended to the east and burned nine dwelling-houses and several stables, the principal sufferers being R. O. Hunter, of the firm of Lindsay Hunter & Macdonald, Mrs. Hocking, J. Pearce, Miss brown, and others not known at present. The station buildings and platform were repeatedly on fire, but were saved by the greatest exertions of the employes of the company. The wind, which was blowing a gale from the west, carried the fire to Tobey's tannery, a distance of over half a mile, and set fire to the wood and tanbark there, a very large quantity of which was burned, and it was only by the almost superhuman exertions of Mr. Tobey and his employes that that the tannery is yet unburnt. About seven o'clock the steam fire engine from Stayner arrived, and the fire now seems to be under control. E. R. Carpenter, druggist, next building to Melville & Fair, will suffer a very heavy loss from water which was played on the building, and in the music hall immediately above kis store; and Lindsay, hunter & McDonald will suffer heavily from removing goods in anticipation of the fire extending. The principal sufferers are as follows:—Melville Fair & Co., general store; loss will be very heavy, as the roof of the building and the upper storey are completely gutted, and the store is completely flooded with water. C. Patton, boots and shoes; Best Bros., gents furnishings; W. A. Hogg, Enterprise printing office, book-bindery, an book-store; W. J. Frame, general store; T. Long & Bros., general store; J. W. Carey, boots and shoes; S. W. Bell, general store; Guilfoyle Bros., general store; C. Cameron, stone dwelling-house, unoccupied; Foreign & Sons, bakers and confectioners; R. W. O'Brine, groceries; R. Carey, boots and shoes; Sheffield restaurant; Cooper, jeweller; Archer, Groceries: W. R. Anderson & Co., hardware; Perrit, tinsmith; Houghton, saddler; Miss Shory, boots and shoes; Chellew furniture—all a total loss. It is impossible to night to give even an approximate amount of loss, which cannot be less than $25,000, or how much is covered by insurance. Longs' loss also Melville, Fair & Co.'s, and Frame's, and Best's, must be very large, as they all had laid in their fall stocks. The Bank of Toronto and Central hotel were only saved by great exertions. At one time it was thought that nothing could save the greater part of the town. As it is, the best business portion of the town is a complete ruin. The Origin of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to be from a match or cigar carelessly dropped on the sidewalk and soon fanned to a flame by the very high winds blowing to-day. The telegraph wires are all demoralized.

NOTICE is hereby given that a promissory note for $150.25, purporting to be made by me in favor of the "Globe Lightning Rod Co.," was obtained from me by one D. Rutherford, who represented himself to be an agent of said Company, as, and for an acknowledgement for the receipt of lightning rod material, I having previously agreed to act as the Company's local agent. Markdale, Aug. 18th, 1881. 51-4t.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

Agriculture.

SUGGESTIONS OF AND FOR THE SEASON.

THE FRUIT GARDEN.

The advantages of a fruit garden are many, and all farmers should have one. Now is a good time to choose a place and prepare it for raising fruit of the smaller sorts. The soil should be well-drained and rich. Strawberry plants may be set out until the coming of the frosts, after which the soil of the beds should be covered with litter, putting it slightly over the plants. There is no great gain, as to the fruit, in planting strawberries late; but the soil is in better condition now than in spring, and work is not so pressing. No crop can be expected the next season unless potted plants are set. Two feet between the rows will be the distance most suitable for working a small cultivator among the plants. Blackberry and Rasberry plants had better be set out in the fall, as they start growing so early in the spring. Blackberries should be 6 to 8 feet apart in rows, and the Raspberries about 4 by 4 feet. In picking the Grapes for market it is best to use the grape scissors, which allow the bunch to be removed without handling and defacing the bloom. The thin-skinned varieties, like the Concord, will not keep long, but the tough skinned kinds, as the Catawba, Iona, and Diana, may be preserved in good shape until the holidays. To thus keep them the grapes must be well ripened, picked with care, and left in a cool room for a few days until the skin gets tough. Pack them afterwards in small boxes (3 to 5 lbs.), putting the fruit in from the bottom, and putting on the cover (bottom), with some pressure, and tacking fast. Label the other side, which is the one to be opened. Keep in a dry and cool place until sent to market.—In American Agriculturist for October.

KITCHEN AND MARKET GARDEN.

There is but little regular garden work after this month, except caring for the crops and preparing for those of early spring. The rubbish that may have accumulated should be cleared away: manure and plow or spade as much of the garden as possible.

Cold frames should be ready for the early lettuce, cabbage, etc. It is a simple matter to construct one of rough boards, the rear part to be one foot high, front eight inches, nailed to posts set to give a width equal to the sash used. It is best to put the frames in a sheltered place facing the south. The object of the cold frame is to keep the plants from sudden changes of weather—not for growth. The sashes should not be put on until the cold weather demands it.

Beets and Carrots are injured by freezing and should therefore be dug so soon as growth is completed. Parsnips and Salsify are improved by frost, and only enough of these for present use need be dug; they may be packed in dry earth in boxes, and [illegible] in the cellar. It is objectionable to store large quantities of roots in the house cellar, as foul gases are constantly rising through the house, making the air unhealthful to the inmates. Cabbages should be taken up before the ground freezes and stored in trenches. These may be made by plowing a deep furrow. The cabbages are heaped, head downward, in the trench, and covered with straw and earth. A simpler way is to set the cabbages on their heads in single rows and cover them with a few inches of earth. Celery not yet earthed up, should be attended to. First bring the leaves together and then draw the earth up. In American Agriculturist for October.

BE PREPARED.

"FRUIT DRYERS AND "EVAPORATORS."

Those who have hot-bed sashes can dry fruit by the heat of the sun in a manner vastly superior to the ordinary method. A box should be made like a hot-bed frame, but with a bottom, and it should have legs to raise it a few inches from the ground. the sashes should fit sufficiently close to keep out dust and insects. In the front of the box, at the bottom, make openings under the middle of each sash, and at the rear, at the top make similar openings. We do not recollect the exact size we used, but probably 12 inches long by three wide will answer. These openings should be covered with wire cloth, though in its adsence mosquito netting or a similar stuff will answer. The fruit, or other article to be dried, should be upon trays or frames covered with some coarse fabric, and raised a few inches from the bottom of the box. The sash being so placed as to catch the full heat of the sun, the drying will go on in a surprisingly rapid manner. The air passing in at the lower openings will become quickly heated, and going out at the upper openings a current will be established, carrying off the moisture from the fruit, etc., in the most satisfactory manner. The product will not be so white as when dried by artifical heat, but for home use just as good, and it will be free from dust and the soiling by insects. We have dried the finest sweet corn imaginable with a contrivance like this, and have no doubt of its efficacy in drying fruit.—American Agriculturist for October.

THE FIRST STEP.

Self-respect is the first step in all reformations; and when your blood is laden with impurities and you are suffering from billiousness or dyspepsia, the first step to a radical cure is to take Burdock Blood Bitters. Price $1 00, trial size 10 cents.

DELAYS ARE DANGEROUS.

And none more so than to neglect the incipient stages of bowel Complaints in infants or adults. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the most prompt and pleasant remedy to administer, and is always reliable to cure cholera infantum, dysentery, cholic, cramps and all summer complaints. For sale by all dealers.

WORTH KNOWING AND REMEMBERING.

A distinguished American physician writes to the Detroit News: It is not generally understood by the mass of people that persons fainting, either from heart disease, apoplexy or sunstroke, should not be raised to a sitting posture even, but should lie flat on the back or side, with sometimes (not always) the head slightly raised upon a pillow. An upright or semisitting posture is, in this class of cases, if long continued, almost sure death. The heart is already enfeebled in its action the brain poorly supplied with blood (hence the fainting condition) and an upright position of the body only adds to a dangerous condition already present. In cases of exhausting and long continued diseases, are other cases where the upright posture should not be allowed. Heart-clots form easier under these conditions and hence sudden death is liable therefrom. The condition of patients laboring under any of the above, and many other diseases, should positively preclude the use of coupes or carriages for their transportation. They should lie at full length, either in an ambulance or an ordinary express waggon with a sunshade of some sort over them.

CANADIAN CHOLERA.

This terrible disease is but little less fatal than real Asiatic cholera, and requires equally prompt treatment. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry will cure it as well as all other forms of bowel complaints of infants or adults if used in proper time.

An experienced stableman says that the best livery horse is not one too heavy, that will steadily travel five or six miles an hour without urging. A "free traveller" cannot stand livery work; and if he goes from eight to ten miles an hour will be in very poor condition and will soon be used up.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

A newsboy rushed into a retail shirt store in Chatham the other day, and thus accosted the proprietor:

"Say, mister, do you retail shirts here?"

"Yes, my son, we have them to fit you at five shillings apiece—very nice ones."

"Oh, blazes, I dont want a whole one. But I seed on your sign, shirts retail and wholesale, and I thought you might re-tail mine for it wants it bad; a dog got hold of it, and wouldn't let go if I'd killed him."

"Why don't your mother mend your clothes?"

"Well, thar! do you think I've a mother? I ain't got a mother nor ever had that—as I know on——"

"You had best go to that man over the way. We can't retail your old one for you."

[illegible]

This life is but a game of cards,
  Which mortals have to learn;
Each shuffles, cuts, and deals the pack,
  And each a trump doth turn;
Some bring a high card to the top,
  And others bring a low,
Some hold a hand quite flush of trumps,
  While others none can show.

Some shuffle with a practiced hand,
  And pick their cards with care,
So they may know what they are delt
  Where all the leaders are.
Thus fools are make the dupes of rogues,
  While rouges each other cheat,
And he is very wise indeed
  Who never meets defeat.

When playing, some throw out the ace,
  The counting cards to save,
Some play the deuce, and some the ten,
  And many play the knave!
Some play for money, and some for fun,
  And some for worldly fame,
But not until the game's played out
  Can they count up the game.

When hearts are trumps we play for love,
  And pleasure rules the hour,
No thoughts of sorrow check our joy
  In beauty's rosy bower;
We sing, we dance, sweet verses make,
  Our cards at random play,
And while our trumps remain on top
  Our game's a holiday.

When diamonds chance to crown the pack,
  The players stake their gold,
And heavy stakes are lost and won
  By gamblers young and old;
Intent on winning each his game
  Doth watch with eager eye,
How he may see his neighbor's cards,
  And beat him on the sly.

When clubs are trumps, look out for war,
  On ocean and on land;
For blood horrors always come
  When clubs are held in hand:
Then lives are staked instead of gold,
  The dogs of war are freed—
Across the broad Atlantic now,
  See! clubs have got the lead!

Last game of all is when the spade
  Is turned by hand of time;
He always seals the closing game
  In every age and clime.
No matter how much each man wins,
  Or how much each man saves,
The spade will finish up the game
  And dig the players graves.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

CHAPTER I.—Continued.

'But, mademoiselle—Seer John's orders—'

'Ninon Duclos, will you do as I order you? I won't have the groom—there. I'm always shocking the resident gentry of this neighbourhood, and I mean to go on shocking them. I feel as if I had a spy at my heels while that beef-eating groom is there. Help me on with my habit and say no more about it.'

Little Ninon knew a good deal better than to dispute Miss Dangerfield's mood when Miss Dangerfield spoke in that tone. Miss Dangerfield had boxed her ears before now, and was very capable of doing it again. Perhaps, on the whole, smart little Ninon rather liked having her ears impetuously slapped by her impulsive young mistress, and the tingling cured, as it invariably was, by the present of Miss Katherine's second best silk dress half-an-hour after.

Looking very bright and dashing, if not in the least pretty, the heiress of Scarswood Park ran lightly down the slippery stairs, out of the vast vaulted hall, where statues gleamed and suits of mail worn by dead-and gone Dangerfields centuries before, flashed back the sunshine. Her dark-green riding-habit fitted her, as Katherine herself had said, "as though she had been born in it,"—the waving brightness of her brown hair was twined in thick plates around her graceful head, and her pork-pie hat with its scarlet bird's wing perched ever so little on one side, set off the piquante face beneath—a thoroughly English face, despite the golden hue of a tropic sun.

'I beg you pardon, miss,' Roberts, the butler, said stepping forward. He was a dignified, elderly, clerical-looking personage, like an archbishop in silk stockings and knee-breeches; 'but if you will hexcuse the remark, miss, I think as 'ow we're going to 'ave a storm. There's that closeness in the hair, miss, and that happearance in that hatmosphere that halways precedes a thunder-storm; if I might make so bold, miss, I should hadvise you not to stay hout more than an hour, at the furthest.'

'Good gracious, Robert, what nonsense! There's not a cloud in the sky. Oh well! that one! why it's no bigger than my hand, I'm going to Castleford, and I don't believe in your thunder-storms.'

'You'll catch it, though, for all that, my young lady,' soliloquised Mr. Roberts, looking after the slight girlish figure as it dashed out of sight down the elm avenue mounted on a spirited black horse. 'Great storms 'ave come from clouds no bigger than a man's 'and before now. But you're a young persing that won't be hadvised, and you'll come to grief one of these days through 'aving too much your own way, as sure as my name is Roberts.'

And then Mr. Roberts philosophically went back to the Castleford Chronicle, and never dreamed that he had uttered a prophecy.

Miss Dangerfield dashed away over the breezy Sussex downs—golden green in the September sunshine. But the brilliance of that sunlight grew dim and dimmer with every passing moment, and looking up presently she saw that her 'cloud no bigger than a man's hand' had spread and darkened, and was fast glooming over the whole sky. Old Roberts had been right then, after all; and unless she stayed at Castleford, or turned back at once, she was in for a drenching.

'I won't turn back, and I won't stop at Castleford,' the baronet's daughter said, setting her white teeth. 'I'll get my books, and I'll go home, and Ilderim and I shall outstrip the lightning after all.'

She dashed into the town. Castleford, was a military depot, and knots of red-coated officers, grouped here and there, lowered their crests, and gazed after her with admiring eyes as she flew by.

'Plucky girl, that,' said Captain Vere de Vere of the Plungers Purple to his friend Captain Howard of the Bobtail Blues. 'Gad! how squarely she sits her saddle. And what a waltzer she is—as graceful as a Parisienne Ballerina, and as springy. Comfortable thing there waiting for some lucky beggar—clear eight thousand a year, and strictly entailed. Not a handsome girl, I admit, but what would you? Deucedly clever, too, and that's a drawback. I hate your clever women—put a fellow out of countenance, by Jove! Shouldn't know anything—women shouldn't—beyond the three great feminine arts, dancing, dressing, and looking pretty.' With which terse summary of women duties the Honourable Plantagenet Vere de Vere lit his huge Manilla and sauntered away. 'She seemed uncommonly sweet on that foreigner, that Creole fellow—what's his name—at the concert last night,' he thought. 'It's always fellows like that, with tenor voices and long eyelashes, that draw the matrimonial prizes. Heard her tell Edith Talbot last night all the officers at Castleford had ginger whiskers, and knew no more how to waltz than so many lively young elephants.

Miss Dangerfield's errand was to a Castleford bookseller's, and her order was for all the newest novels. She came out presently, followed by the obsequious shopman carrying her parcel and bowing his thanks. The storm was very near now. The whole sky was dark—there was that oppressive heat and stillness in the air that usually precedes a thunder-storm.

'Coming!' Miss Dangerfield thought, vaulting into her saddle. 'Now, then, Ilderim, my beauty, my darling, outstrip the storm if you can!'

She was off like wind, and in a few minutes the town lay far behind her. But fate had decreed to take sides with Roberts.

On the bare downs, treeless and houseless, the lightning leaped out like a two-edged sword. There came the booming crash of thunder, then a deluge of rain, and the mid-day summer tempest was upon her in its might. The swift, sudden blaze of the lightning in his eyes startled the nervous system of Ilderim. He tossed his little black Arabian head in the air with a snort of terror, made a bound forward and fled over the grassy plains with the speed of an express train.

'A runaway, by Jove!'

A man darted forward with the cry upon his lips, and made the agile spring of a wild cat at Ilderim's bridle-rein. A moment's struggle, and then the spirited Arab stood still under the grasp of an iron hand, quivering in every limb, and his mistress, looking down from her saddle, met full two of the most beautiful eyes into which it had ever been her good fortune to look.

It was Mr. Gaston Dantree, the handsome, silver-voiced tenor of last night's concert, and a flash of glad surprise lit up her face.

'Mr. Dantree!' she cried, 'you! and in this tempest, and at so opportune a moment. How shall I thank you for say—for rendering me such timely assistance?

'For saving my life,' she had been going to say, but that would have been coming it a little too strong. Her life had not been in the smallest danger—she was a thorough horsewoman, and could have managed a much wilder animal than Ilderim. But the knight to the rescue was Mr. Dantree, and last night Miss Dangerfield had looked for the first time into those wondrous eyes of gold-brown light, and fallen straight in love with their owner.

He was very handsome; perfectly, faultlessly handsome, with an olive complexion, a low forehead, a chisselled nose, a thick black moustache, and two dark almond eyes of 'liquid light.' Not tall, not stout, not very manly looking, perhaps, in any way—men were rather given to sneer at Mr. Gaston Dantree's somewhat effeminate beauty. But they never sneered long. There was that in Mr. Dantree's black eyes, in Mr. Dantree's musical voice, in Mr. Dantree's trained muscles, that would have rendered a serious difficulty a little unpleasant.

He took off his hat now, despite the pouring rain, and stood before the heiress of Scarswood, looking like the Apollo himself in a shabby shooting jacket.

'You do me too much honour, Miss Dangerfield; I don't really think your life was in any danger—still it's pleasant to know I was the one to stop your black steed all the same. Rather a coincidence, by the bye, that I should meet you here just at present, as, taking advantage of last night's kind invitation, I was about to present myself at Scarswood.'

'And Scarswood is very well worth seeing, I assure you. As it is not more than a quarter of a mile to the gates, suppose you resume your hat and your journey?'

'But, Miss Daugerfield, you will get your death at this place in this downpour.'

'Oh, no, I'll not,' Katherine answered coolly. 'The rain will never fall that will give me my death! You don't know how strong I am. Come, let me see if you can walk as fast as Ilderim.'

She looked at him with that brilliant smile that lit her dark face into something brighter than beauty.

'Come, Mr. Dantree,' she repeated, 'let me be cicerone for once, and show you the splendours of Scarswood. It is the show place of the neighborhood, you know, built by a Dangerfield, I am afraid to say how many centuries ago. We came over with William, the what's-his-name, you know, or, perhaps, William found us here when he arrived; I am not positive which. Were a dreadfully old family, indeed, and I wouldn't be anybody but Katherine Dangerfield, of Scarswood Park, for the world!'

She dashed under the huge stone arch of masonry as she spoke, half laughing, wholly in earnest. She was proud of the old blood that flowed so [illegible] in her veins, of this noble mansion, of the [illegible] inheritance which was her birthright.

'Welcome to Scarswood, Mr. Dantree,' she said, as he passed by her side under the Norman arch.

He raised his hat.

'Thank you, Miss Dangerfield,' he said gravely; and so, still by her side, walked up the dripping elm avenue and into the house.

His fatal beauty—fatal, though he was but seven-and-twenty, to many women—had done its work once more. Her own hand had brought him there, her own voice had spoken her sentence. Gaston Dantree stood under the roof of Scarswood Hall, and, until her dying hour, this day would stand out distinct from all other days in Katherine Dangerfield's life.

Sir John sat in his library alone, that letter from Paris still crushed in his hand as though it had been a serpent. It seemed a very harmless serpent at first sight; it only contained these lines, written in an elegant flowing Italian chirography:

PARIS, September 23.

"MY DEAR SIR JOHN DANGERFIELD:—How delightedly my pen writes the title; A baronet! Who would have thought it? And Scarswood Park is yours, and your income is clear eight thousand a year. Who could have hoped it? And you're back in England, and la petite—the little Katherine. Darling little Katherine! So full of spirit and self-will, as she was when I saw her last, and that is fifteen years ago. Ah, mon Dieu! fifteen weary, weary, weary years. My dear baronet, I am coming to see you; I know you will be enchanted. On the third of October you will send your carriage to Castleford Station to meet the 7:20 London express and me. And your servant will ask for Mrs. Vavasor. I adapt my names as I do my conversation, to my company; and among the "aristocratic county families of Sussex, let me be aristocratic too. Adieu, my baronet, for the present; and allow me to subscribe myself by the old and alas! plebian name of

"HARRIET HARMAN.

P.S.—Tell my pet, Katherine, I am coming. Kiss the darling child for me."

He had sat there for hours as he sat now, that letter crushed in his hand, a grayish pallor on his face, his eyes looking blankly out at the drifting rain, at the tossing, wind-blown trees. The lightning leaped forth at intervals, the summer thunder broke over the roof, the summer rain beat on the glass. He neither saw nor heard; he sat like a man stunned by a great and sudden blow.

'And I thought her dead,' he murmured once. 'I hoped she was dead. I thought, after fifteen years' silence, I was safe; and now.—oh, God! will the wicked wish never be granted?'

He sat there still as he had sat since he left the breakfast table, when the door was flung wide, and Katherine, dripping like a mermaid, stood before him.

May I come in, papa, or have you fallen asleep? Do you know it is two o'clock, and past luncheon time, and that I have brought home a guest? It's Mr. Dantree, papa—you remember him, you know—and he wants to see the house, and I want you to be civil to him. He's in the blue drawing-room; and while I'm changing my habit I wish you would go up and entertain him. Papa!' She broke off suddenly, catching sight of his altered face. 'What is the matter? You look like your own ghost!'

He rose up stiffly, as if his limbs were cramped, crushing the letter more tightly still in his hand. He turned away from the window, so that his face was hidden from her, as he answered:

'I am a little cold. Who did you say was waiting, Katherine? Oh, yes; the singing man—Gaston Dantree. By the bye, Kathie, tell Harrison to prepare one of the front chambers for a—a lady—an old friend of mine—who is coming to visit us. She will be here on the evening of the third of Octoker next, and her name is Mrs. Vavasor.'

CHAPTER II.

MRS. VAVASOR.

The London express, due at Castleford station at 7:20, rushed in with an unearthly shriek, like Sinbad's black monster, with the one red, fiery eye. There were five passengers for the town—four men and a woman. The train disgorged them and then fled away, shrieking once more, into the black Oct. night.

A wet and gusty autumn evening, a black and starless sky frowning down upon a black and sodden earth. A bitter blast blew up from the sea, and whirled the dead leaves in drifte before it. The station dreary and isolated, as it is in the nature of stations to be, looking drearier than ever tonight. Far off the lamps of the town glimmered athwart the rain and fog, specks of light in the eerie gloom.

The four male passengers who had quitted the train hurried with their portmanteaus, buttoned to the chin, and with hats slouched forward over their noses—honest shopkeepers of Castleford, but looking villianously brigandish in the light of the station lamps. Only the female passenger remained, and she came tripping up the platform with a little satchel in her hand, crisp and smiling, to the chief station official.

'I beg your pardon, sir: but can you tell me if the carriage from Scarswood is waiting for me?'

She was a beautiful little woman. Two great dark eyes of lustrous lihgt beamed up in the official's face, and a smile that lit up the whole station with its radiance dazzled him. She had feathery black ringlets—she had a brilliant high colour—well, a trifle to high, probably, for some fastidious tastes—she had teeth white and more glisting than anything the official had ever seen outside a dentist's show-case—she had the tiniest little figure in the world, and she had—as far as the official could judge, for the glitter of her whole appearance—some three and thirty years. With the flash of her white teeth, the sparkle of the black eyes, the glow of the rose-red cheeks, she dazzled you like a sudden burst of sun light and you never stopped to think until afterward how sharp and rasping was the voice in which she addressed you.

The carriage from Scarswood? No, it had not—that is to say, the official did not know whether it had or not.

Would the lady be pleased to sit down? There was a fire in here, and he would go and ascertain.

'I certainly expected to find it waiting,' the little lady said, tripping lightly after him. 'Sir John knows I am coming to night. He is such an old friend of mine—Sir John. It's odd now the carriage isn't waiting—tell them when they do come, Mrs. Vavasor is here.'

'The carriage has come,' announced the official on the moment. 'This way, madame, if you please.'

The close carriage, its lamps glowing like two red eyes in the darkness, its horses pawing the ground, its coachman stiff and surly on a box, was drawn up at the station door. The official held the door open—she thanked him with a radiant smile, and then Sir John Dangerfield's carriage was flying through the darkness of the wet October night over the muddy high road to Scarswood Park. Little Mrs. Vavasor wiped the blurred glass, and strained her bright black eyes as the vehicle whirled up the avenue, to catch the first glimpse of the house. It loomed up at last, a big black shadow in the darkness. Light gleamed all along its front windows, and the distant sound of music floated out into the night. Mrs. Vavasor's fascinating face was at its brightest—the sparkle in her eyes sparkled more than ever.

'A party—a ball perhaps. Let me see, the third of October—why la petite's birthday, of course. Miss Dangerfield, heiress of Scarswood, is just seventeen to-night. How stupid of me to forget it.' She laughed in the darkness and solitude, a little low laugh not pleasant to hear. 'I wonder how poor Sir John will meet me, and what account he will give me of his daughter? It couldn't have been pleasant for him to recieve my note. I dare say by this time he thought me dead,'

She stepped out a moment in the rain, then into the lighted vestibule, then into the spacious enterance hall where Mrs. Harrison, in a gray silk gown and white lace cap, and all the dignity of housekeeper, met her courtesy.

'Mrs. Vavasor, I think, ma'am?'

Mrs. Vavasor's enchanting smile answered in the affirmative.

'Sir John's orders are very attention, ma'am, and he was to be told the minute you arrived. This way, if you please, and you're to wait here, ma'am until he comes to you.'

She led the way up stairs, and threw open the door of a half-lit, elegant apartment, all bright with upholstery, curtains, and carpet of blue and gold.

'How very nice,' Mrs. Vavasor remarked, glancing pleasantly around; 'and you are the housekeeper, I suppose, my good soul? And your young lady is having a party on her birthnight? How pleasant it must be to be only seventeen, and handsome and rich, and a baronet's daughter.'

Mrs. Vavasor laughed that sharp little laugh of hers that rather grated on sensitive ears.

'Mrs. Dangerfield is handsome, no doubt, Mrs.——ah—'

'Harrison, ma'am,' the housekeeper responded, rather stiffly. 'And Miss Katherine is very 'andsome, indeed, in my eyes. I'll tell sir John you're here, ma'am, at once, if you'll please sit down.'

But it pleased Mrs. Vavasor to stand—she turned up the lamps until the room was flooded with light, then walked over to a full length mirror and looked at herself steadily and long.

'Fading!' she said; 'fading! Rouge, French coiffures, enamel, bellanadonna, and the rest of it are very well; but they can't make even a woman of thirty-seven into a girl of twenty. Still considering the life I've led'—she set her teeth like a little hon-dog. 'Ah, what a bitter fight the battle of life has been for me! If I were wise I would pocket my wrongs, forego my vengeance, and live happy in Scarswood Hall for ever after. I wonder if Sir John would marry me if I asked him?'

The door opened and Sir John came in. Little Mrs. Vavasor turned round from the glass, folded her small hands and stood and looked at him with a smile on her face.

He was very pale, and grim as the grave. So for a moment they stood, like two duelists waiting for the word in dead silence. Then the lady spoke:

'How do you do, Sir. John? When we parted I remember you found me admiring myself in the glass; when we meet again, after fifteen years—Dieu! how old it makes one feet—you find me before the glass again. Not admiring myself this time, you understand. I sadly fear I have grown old and ugly in all those hard-fought years. But you—you're not a day older, and just the same handsome stalwart soldier I remember you. Won't you shake hands for the sake of old times, Sir John, and say 'you are welcome' to a poor little woman who has travelled all the way from Paris to see you?

She held out her little gloved hand. He drew away with a gesture of repulsion, and crossing to the chimney-piece leaned upon it, his face hard and set, in the light of the lamps.

'Why have you come here?' he asked.

'Ah, ciel! hear him;—such a cruel question. And after fifteen years I stand alone in this big, pitiless world, a poor little friendless woman, and I come to the gallant gentleman who fifteen years ago stood my friend—such a friend—and he asks me in that cruel voice why I have come!'

'That will do, Mrs. Vavasor—this is not a theatre, nor am I an appreciative audience. Tell me the truth, if you can—let us have plain speaking. Why have you come here? What do you want?

'That is plain language certainly. I have come here because you are in my power—absolutely and wholly in my power. And I want to stay here—as an honoured guest, just so long as I please. Is that plain enough to satisfy you, or would you like me to put it still plainer?'

Her dazzling black eyes mocked him, her insolent smile set his teeth on edge. Hatred—abhorrence—were in his eyes as he looked at her.

'You want money, I suppose? Well, you shall have it, though I paid you your price long ago, and you promised to trouble me no more. But you can't stay here; it is simply impossible.'

'It is simply nothing of the kind. I have come to stay—my luggage is down yonder in the hall, and you will tell them presently to fetch it up and show me to my room. I do want money—yes, it is the universal want—and I mean to have it. Eight thousand a year and Scarswood Park, one of the finests seats in Sussex. And such an old family!—baronets created by James the First, and knights centuries and centuries before! How proud your daughter must feel of her ancient name and leniage!' And Mrs. Vavasor laughed aloud, her tinkling laugh strikes shrilly on his persensitive ears.

'You will leave my daughter's name out of the question, if you please,' the baronet retorted haughtily; 'such lips as yours sully her name. If you had one spark of womanly feeling, one grain of self respect life from the left you have led, a woman's heart in your breast, you would never come near her. In heaven's name go—I will give you anything, anything, only don't insist in staying here.'

For answer she walked back to the mirror, and deliberately began removing her bonnet, gloves and mantle.

As I intend going down and joining your party presently, and being introduced to the county families, I think I will go up to my room at once, if you please, Sir John. By the way, is Mr. Peter Dangerfield one of your guests on this happy occasion? It strikes me I should like to know him. He is your only brother's only son and heir-in-law—after your daughter, of course. How awkward for that young gentleman you should have a daughter at all. And the estate is strictly entailed to the nearest of kin. There was a gleam almost dangerous malice in her eyes as she turned from the mirror. 'Yes, I am really anxious to make the acquaintance of Mr. Peter Dangerfield.'

He turned almost livid—he made a step towards her.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

SET BACK 42 YEARS.—I was troubled for many years with Kidney Complaint, Gravel, &c.; my blood became thin; I was dull and inactive; could hardly crawl about; was an old worn out man all over; could get nothing to help me, until I got Hop Bitters, and now I am a boy again. My blood and kidneys are all right, and I am as active as a man of 30, although I am 72, and I have no doubt it will do as well for others of my age. It is worth a trial.—(Father.)—Sunday Mercury.

I WANT TO MEET MY OLE MAN.

A correspondent from the Boston Herald who is enjoying himself among the spiritualists at Lake Pleasent narrates the following particulars of a seance given by a medium to a colored woman:

"You've seen a deal of sorrow," said the medium, "but there's happeness yet in store for you. I hear the name of Tommy. Have you a little boy named Tommy in spirit life?"

"Fore de good Lord, honey, lebe dis chile! don't come nigh me! How you know my Tommy dead? Josephine, Josephine, for de Lord sake come here." In response to this summons an intelligent colored girl of fourteen summers came to the woman's bedside. "What you think, chile, dis woman don gone tell me 'bout your little brudder Tommy Judson, who don gone dead eber so long ago!"

"That is not all I have to tell you," said the medium. "I see two men here, both in spirit form. I think you have been married twice and both your husbands are dead, but there's another here that wants you; he isnot dead."

"Go 'way, woman; don't ye go to pokin' any yer men on me, case I don't want 'em. I'se had enough on 'em. I'se been married three times, and am de mudder of twenty-one chil'ren and dat Josephene am all dat's left. But, say, honey, der ye see my first ole man here?"

"Yes, a name is given; it is William?"

"Yes, bress de Lold. Ole man ye come to see me. Where is ye, honey?" and, in her excitement, the sick woman rose to a sitting position and trembled in agitation.

"You will see him in the spirit world my good woman. You'll be happy there, for there are no washtubs in heaven."

"Bress de Lord, bress de Lord. I want to meet my ole man up dar, or some part ob him. I don't care if it am nothin' but his ole trousers hanging on de bedpost, as he used to hang 'em up way down in ole Virginia."

Dr. FOWLER'S EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY.

Cures all forms of bowel complaints in infants or adults. The most safe, pleasant and perfect remedy known. Purely vegetable and free from opiates or poisonous drugs.

Can, I see the lady of the house?" inquired the peddlar.

"Well, yes you can if you aint blind fold," snapped the woman who had answered the bell.

"Oh, beg pardon, madam; you are the lady of the house then?"

"Yes, I am. What did you take me for? Did you think I was the gentleman of the house, or the next door neighbour, or a farmhand, or the pump, or the cat, or the ice chest?"

"I didn't know but you might be the youngest daughter."

"O, didn't yer? Well, that was natural, too," replied the lady of the, house. "What d'ye want, sir?"

Then the peddlar displayed his wares, and when he left that door-step half an hour later his face was full of pleasure and his pockets full of money. He understood human nature, and had made a good sale.

WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT IT.

One who has fairly tested Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, though prejudiced against proprietory medicines in general, writes—"I would not rest over night without this reliable remedy for sudden attacks of Cholic, Cramps and Cholera Morbus so prevalent in the summer season. I keep a bottle ready at hand."

A criminal case of curious but general interest was disposed of lately at the Middlesex Assizes held in London, Ont. It appears one Malcolm J. Kent, the manager of a loaning corporation in London, received through the post a letter from from one Gilmour, a Minto farmer. The letter was addressed to "The London & Canadian Loan and Agency Company, London." This Company's place of business was at Toronto, and hence the London P. O. authorities delivered the letter to Kent, as the latter's company had a somewhat similar name. The letter enclosed an agreement executed by Gilmour, extending for a further term payment of a loan had from the Toronto Company. The prisoner, after opening the letter and perusing contents, wrote Gilmour apprising him of its receipt, and of the mistake, but adding that his company could deal with him about the loan on better terms. Gilmour replied declining the offer, and requesting the letter to be forward to Toronto, to its proper destination. Some two weeks elapsed after the time the solicitors of the Toronto company should have received the letter before its arrival, and an enquiry into the cause of the detention resulted in an information being laid under the Post Office Act against Kent for detaining the letter. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. The judge, on passing sentence, remarked that the offence was a serious one, and called for imprisonment by way of punishment, but in view of petitions presented on behalf of the prisoner, he would impose a fine of $400, the prisoner to be held in custody till it was paid. The fine being paid the accused was afterwards released to the relief and satisfaction of his friends.

PROTON FALE SHOW.

On Friday, 30th Sept., we took the train at Markdale for Dundalk, a distance of 16 miles, which took an hour.

There we were joined by Mr. P. McGregor, Mr. Geo. Middleton, Treasurer Proton Agricultural Society, and others. We drove to Hopeville, a distance of 9 miles, which was done in 70 minutes. The road is very good, and a number of fine farms are to be seen in that section of country. We noticed a very fine bank barn, 65x80, built the present season by Mr. Wm. Mills; such buildings are an indication of progress. The day was fine though somewhat dusty, and a good number had gathered by the time we arrived.

The show of Draught Horses was very good, the teams entered in that class being very fine specimens. The two-year-old colts were something extra, and if the horses of Proton may be judged from the exhibit of the above they are ahead of their neighbors for horses. Mr. McLaren had a very fine pen of pigs, some nine or ten in all.

In the Hall things were crowded yet orderly. Mr. Hewetson, of Dundalk, had a display of millinery, etc., which was set off to good advantage by his milliner, Miss Foster. A lady's suit of mink seal, valued at $90, was one of the chief features of the above display. W. H. Peterson, wool manufacturer, of Dundalk, had a good selection of woollen goods.

In Grain the exhibit was not large, but the quality made up for the small quantity. Roots and vegetables were good. The ladies' work filled the apartment assigned to it and done no discredit to the exhibitors.

There was good accommodation considering circumstances. Mr. Scarlett, the hotel-keeper, made ample provision for the large crowd; and also Mr. McArthur and Mr. J. McArdle gave a helping hand, accommodating those from a distance with stabling for horses, &c.

The following is the Prize List, kindly furnished by A. G. Hunter.

The day being favorable there was a large turn out, especially of the young people, and everything seemed to be favorable. The Judges were on the ground and accomplished their work with credit and general satisfaction. We were pleased to meet all the officers and directors of the Society at their post, and credit is due to them tor the manner in which they discharged their duty, having made every endeavor to give satisfaction to all competitors.

It was thought by some of the old fathers that the show would be a failure this year, on account of some difficulty which arose during the year as to where the Society would hold its exhibition. We would have been pleased to have met some of these old fathers at the show, but they were absent.

NOTICE.—We wish it disinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves reponsible fo the opinions expressed by our correspondent

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—I daresay "Taxarious" will be beginning to feel something like our friend "Tammas Tickle," that he has "floored" me, and that his logic being unanswerable, I am completely "dumfoonded," but no, not yet. Taxarious says that if I will read up church history "It will be found that it was by superstition and not by Taxation that the State first enthralled the churches." There is much truth in the statement; but I think it would be stating the matter more correctly to say that it was designing, unprincipled scoundrels, working under the superstition of others, combining in many instances fanaticism with Superstition, ignoring everything but self, that brought things ecclesiastical into such a deplorable state. History records many curious facts; sometimes the church has been the stepping-stone to the throne, and sometimes the throne to the church; and for many centuries the two (Church and State) have been so closely connected as to be almost indistinguishable, the one from the other. It is a long time since three of the ten kingdoms, viz: the Vandals, the Ostrogoths, and the Lombards, is typified by the ten-toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, whose head was of fine gold, his breast and arms of silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay, were completely under the sway of the Pope, hence the Tiara, or three-crowned cap, which he wears on his head. Indeed, since very shortly after the days of the Apostles, when Rome was the Capital of the Roman Empire, and of the world; when the Roman Bishops after having been looked up to for a while by those more remote from the Capital, began to consider it as right that superiority, which the surrounding churches had freely yielded. If Rome is the Queen of Cities, why should not her pastor be the King of Bishops? Why should not the Roman Church be the mother of Christendom? Why should not all nations be her children, and her authority their sovereign law? It was easy for the ambitious heart of man to reason thus; ambitious Rome did so, and all know the result:—Ever since then the encroachments of power form a great part of history, as the resistance of those whose liberties are invaded forms the other portion. And why is this? The reason is easily come at, so clear that any one may see it, viz: that church and state were too closely connected, "running too much in the same groove," and this has been my theme in all these letters. Taxarious says I am "afraid that a regular taxation system would cause many to fling churches and religion overboard." In this he is wrong; I am not afraid. I said that even this would "work for good," but it would be as sure to "wind up" the taxation system proposed, for it would just bring the support of religion on the only parties who ought to, and will support it with out being taxed, viz:—the Christians.

Nothing surprises me more than to see professing Chrirtians straining every nerve to draw support to the church from the outside world. I cannot think money got in this way will do much good; I have always looked upon the free will offerings of a converted sinner to the support of the cause of Him "who died that he might live," as being like the "quality of mercy" of which Shakespeare writes "it is twice blessed; it blesses him that gives, and him that takes." Man is a curious being. Some men absent themselves from church and church ordinances professing to be offended at the conduct of some member or officer in the church, or even at something the minister has said or done. The congregation may be in arrears to their pastor, and he may really be in comparative want, and should he even hint about money from the pulpit, some are so "thinskined" that they will be offended, and absent themselves from his ministrations. Such men are much to be pitied. If the minister has to say anything about money, whose fault is it? Doubtless the congregation are not doing their duty, for if they did their duty, there would be no need of sermons with a "siller tail" as some call it. I think the real cause of these men acting as they do, is something else than they profess it to be. It is, I fear, because "the root of the matter is not in them;" "they have the form but not the power of godliness"; they have only "a name to live," and they want that name to cost them as little as possible; and with all they want to counted good, respectable Christians, and throw the blame on somebody or something, instead of avowing the real cause, viz: that the evil is in themselves, that their hearts are not right with God; that they are still in the gall of bitterness and the bonds of iniquity. If such will leave the church apparently on whimsical grounds, why not write their names off the roll at once? Why should not the dead limbs be cut off the spiritual tree? If we would keep the church in healthy state, clear away all those noxious weeds; "dig around it, and dung it," and see if it will not then bear fruit. Let the minister warn, admonish, reprove, let him do all he can to bring sinners "into the fold," but let not the Roll of church membership be blurred, and bloated with the names of members who have not for years sought to commemorate a Saviour's dying Love, and obey the command "do this in remembrance of me."

I cannot help feeling that there is something of a harsh, unchristian sound in the word "tax" in the sense in which Taxarious uses it. I always like to go back to "first principles," let us then go back 1800 years or more, when Christianity was in its infancy, what do we find in the New Testament? Do we find a tax imposed in the Apostolic church? Verily not. Nothing is surer than that the early Christian Church was supported by voluntary contributions. The exhortation there given is to give as God has prospered them; to lay by them in store on the first day of the week. And to show that they did not make a special occasion, a time for collecting money, take St. Paul's letter to the Christians at Corinth where he says, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. Do we do like this now? If Paul was with in five thousand miles now, and a new church to be opened on which there was thousands of dollars of debt, would we not do all in our power to get Paul to come and preach at the opening, that we might have a crowd and get our coffers filled? Paul said at you time "that there be no gatherings when I come." What does the church say now? She says Paul knew nothing about it; he was entirely wrong; the church could not get along in that way now. We must be "instant in season and out of season" to get money; never mind Paul, he was an old fashioned man at the best; but this is the age of improvement, we cannot stand still, we must do as others do; see, not long since there was a great gun came to a church opening in our neighborhood, and instead of a powerful speech as some expected, he commenced an auction, and took bids from old and young, member and adherent, stranger and friend, until all had been done that could be done, and wound up by singing "Ho, My Comrades," in the language of the South Sea Islanders, or some equally distant race.

Well, Mr. Editor, we certainly live in an extremely peculiar age; but, although fashions change, although men's ideas on every conceivable subject should change, although everything around us should change, Religion remains the same; Christianity is just the same to-day as it was on that morning when our Saviour burst the barrier of the tomb and arose a Triumphant Conqueror. If the early Christian Church was supported by voluntary offerings, why should not the same be done now? In olden times the way was to bring an offering, the Collector or Treasurer had not then to wait on the people, the people waited upon them. I see that the Sabbath School lesson for next Sabbath bears directly on this point I hope Superintendents and Teachers will bring the lesson home in their several classes and bring out the spirit of liberality that is there taught.

It is a degrading thing to see men well-to-do in the world, men with farms clear of debt, and money out at interest, paying their minister in "mere nothing," but it is to be hoped that as we have just gathered in a bountiful harvest, and realizing so high prices for our produce, we will show our gratitude to the Giver by giving a fair share of his own for the support of Gospel ordinances. I know some congregations that are deeply in debt to their minister; let us hope that 1882 will open with sheets clear of all debts, and a good balance on the credit side of our Congregational Ledgers, and show that we will voluntarily support the church and set aside the necessity of a "Tax".

Although W. J. McFarland is not going to have an opening day of his Millinery Show Room on account of his large staff of clerks being driven to their utmost ability in waiting on the vast number of customers which throng his capacious store and opening out his immense importations of European goods, yet he never had a more effective, stylish and cheaper stock of millinery goods to offer to his lady friends.

Euphrasia fall show came off at Rocklyn on Tuesday, the 4th inst., The day being cool and dry everything passed off pleasantly. This society having taken a step forward in purchasing grounds, fencing it, and erecting a hall; this move, we think, an important and wise one. The show was very good on the whole, there was however a deficiency in the quantity of Fruit, but the quality was good. The grain was indeed excellent both in quality and quantity. The crowded state of our columns at present prevents a more full account of the exhibit, will give Prize list next week.

We cannot but admire Wilcox's new and large stock of Jewelry and Silver-plated ware, although he has put in a new and handsome show case, there is not sufficient room to display it to advantage. We admire still more the manner in which Wilcox has conducted his business during the seven years he has been in business in Markdale, during which time we have frequently transacted business with him, and can say without fear of contradiction that his business is conducted on strictly honourable principles, therefore he is deserving of the large patronage and confidence of the people he commands. There is one state which Mr. W. has not yet entered, but we hope to be called on at no very distant day, to chronicle the fact that he has entered the ancient and honourable state of matrimony.

Miss Bella Baird, of the City of Toronto, has arrived, and assumes control of W. J. McFarland's Millinery Show Room. Ladies, we would advise you to see her before ordering your finery.

The Bazaar and Concert held by the Ladies' Aid Association of the Presbyterian Church proved a decided success. The numerous fancy and useful articles at the bazaar were mostly sold, and the rich and substantial dinner was well patronized. The concert was largely attended. Dr. Sproule, M. P., being called to the chair filled it in his usual masterly and humorous manner. The first on the programme was Mr. Collett, of Durham, the celebrated violinist, while Mrs. McIntyre played the accompaniment on the organ. Mr. Collett proved no discredit to his reputation. He is a whole team in himself. Then followed Mr. A. Patterson with a song; Mr. D. Irvine, a reading; Miss Davis, instrumental solo; J. R. and Miss Anderson, who stirred the mirthful element; violin solo by Mr. Collett; song by Mr. McIntyre; Mr. W. H. McDougall gave "Widow Green" and "Catharine likes me purty well," in his usually masterly manner; a solo by Mr. C. W. Speers; song by Mr. Patterson; solo by Mr. Collett; song by Mr. Anderson; instrumental music by Messrs Cunningham and Newen; solo by Mr. Collett, after which the audience sang "God Save the Queen," and dispersed to their homes after spending a very pleasant evening. There was in the neighborhood of $70 raised in all.

DUNDALK.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. John McDonnell has been refitting his grist mill and is now prepared to give satisfaction to those who may favor him with their patronage.

The Dundalk Herald is the cheapest paper of the size in Grey, and will be sent to any address for one dollar per year. Hand in your name to A. G. Hunter, local editor, Dundalk.

A line of mail is much needed between Dundalk and the Northern Railway, by way of Shrigley, Badjeros and Creemore.

The steel rails are now laid within a mile of Flesherton Station.

Large quantities of grain and potatoes coming into Dundalk, and a first-class market it is.

Malcolm Sinclair, con. 9, lot 38, Proton, sent a bag of potatoes to a friend by train from Dundalk last Monday. The bag contained 160 potatoes (Early Rose), and weighed 106 lbs, nearly ⅔ of a pound each.

There is a large business in grain. Good yield and good prices will make the farmers happy.

We have the largest potato market on the line; good prices—from 70c. to 80c. per bag.

W. H. Peterson has let the contract of building his carding and woollen factory to John Marshall; building to commence at once.

Willie Graham called into the Herald office and exhibited a beautiful bunch of ripe wild strawberries.

Farmers ought now to be collecting their root crops, as the fall is fast advancing and cold weather and snow may set in on short notice.

PRICEVILLE.

From a Correspondent.

A few cases of Diphtheria, confined to a few families, have been reported in this neighbourhood. The recent showers have clothed the scenery with a beautiful verdant green.

"Paralysis" has been very prevalent in this place but as the fundamental cause has been removed, no serious results are expected.

The new School house is rapidly approaching completion. It is to be finished by the 10th. What a city one side is so favored. Oh, for some tuck-pointing.

The Presbyterians here are agitating a new church, this is a move in the right direction. Good for the Presbyterians.

Many of the farmers have threshed and report good yield. Draw it out boys, while there is such a good market.

REPLY TO REV. MR. WARD.—PART III.

In a work on the "Church of Christ," by the Rev. Arthur Litton, an Anglican Clergyman, he tells us how the two words "Elder" and "Bishop" were applied to the same officer in the Apostolic Church. "The word Presbyter or Elder was taken from an office in the Jewish Synagogue, and was the original, if not the exclusive, name employed in all Christian communities of Jewish origin; hence we do not meet with the word 'Bishop' until the Church had existed for more than twenty years. In churches, however, composed of converted heathens, to whom Jewish titles and offices were not familiar, another name in general use among the Greeks, and signifying overseer, began to be employed, viz.: 'episcopos,' and what in the New Testament is rendered 'Bishop.'"

Presbyter or Elder, then, is the Jewish name, and Bishop is the Gentile name applied in the New Testament to the same class of officers. The entire evidence of the New Testament confirms this; for there are numerous passages in which the words Presbyters and Bishops are used interchangeably, the expression Presbyters and Bishops, or Bishops and Presbyters, never occurs. Paul, pre-eminently the Apostle to the Gentiles, is the only Apostle who applies the word Bishop to the pastors of Christian Churches, but he never uses the word Bishop when addressing churches of Jewish origin. Peter and James, too, when addressing Jewish Christians, call the pastors presbyters or elders, but never bishops, and in the book of Revelations, while the word presbyter or elder very frequently occurs, the word bishop never occurs. Throughout said book in the various scenical representations of the Church, both in heaven and on earth, elders or presbyters are frequently seen, but bishops never.

Now if there were bishops in the Apostolic Church, how do we account for the ommission? Perhaps Mr. Ward could tell us. It must be admitted then, that during the Apostolic age, presbyters and bishops were not two distinct orders of ministers, but only one order with two names, but according to Mr. Ward presbyters and bishops are now essentially two distinct orders. Who originated this distinction? When did it originate? and by what authority did it originate? No matter what answers may be given to these questions it is quite clear that the order of bishops in the Episcopal Churches as distinct from and superior to presbyters is not of Apostolic origin. Mr. Ward proceeds—"By virtue of the same commission the Apostles were empowered to ordain others," and "this commission to ordain was always to continue in the Christian Church and to remain in such hands as the Apostles should convey it to." Precisely so, with this statement we entirely agree, and so the Apostles did ordain others—they "ordained elders in every church which they had planted," and those elders as we have seen, exercised the same gift or authority in ordaining others. They ordained Timothy, 1 Tim. iv, 14—of which the Apostle Paul speaks approvingly—hence, as this commission to ordain "was to remain in such hands as the Apostles should convey it to," and as the Apostles conveyed the commission to the elders, therefore the power to ordain was to continue in the elders of the Christian Church for all time.

Says Mr. Ward—"The only way then to know in whose hands this commission is now lodged, is to inquire what persons were appointed by the Apostles to succeed them in their office." Well, we have made the inquiry, and the result of that inquiry is, that it is "plain to any person reading the scripture without prejudice," that the Apostles ordained elders in every church, and that these elders were and are the legitimate successors of the Apostles, and that there were but two distinct orders of ministers in the Apostolic Church "which were designed to continue to the end of the World."

Mr. Ward proceeds—"For besides these two, viz.: deacons and Presbyters or elders, who are some times called bishops, we read of another order which was superior to and had authority over both these, such were the Apostles Timothy, Titutus, and others."—Where, we ask, does Mr. Ward find this other "superior order?" Where does he read that Timothy and Titus were Apostles at all? that is in the sense we have already indicated, viz.: that they had seen the Lord. Again, where does he find that they were "superior to and had authority over the others?" We have shown that Timothy was ordained by the Presbyters, 1 Tim. iv, 14. How could he be superior to those from whom he had received his commission? Why, common sense would say "impossible." Did ever anyone hear of a mere priest or presbyter now-a-days ordaining or consecrating a bishop? Why I am sure that even Mr. Ward will admit the absurdity of this position; but if Mr. Ward's contention be correct, then we have presbyters ordaining bishops, for Timothy was ordained, says Paul, by the "laying on of the hands of the presbytery."

Mr. Ward proceeds—"It is plain from the epistle of Paul to Timothy and Titus, that they presided over the presbyters, had power to enforce them to their duty, to receive accusations against them, and judicially to pass sentence upon them." The portion of God's word to which this refers is doubtless 1 Tim. v, 19-20. "Against an elder receive not an accusation but before two or three witnesses. Them that sin rebuke before all that others may fear." Mr. W. thinks that this fully establishes the superiority of Timothy over the elders, whereas a closer inspection of this and co-relative passages would show that it merely refers to that fraternal regard, friendly solicitude and brotherly care which every member of Christ's body was enjoined to exercise over and for his brother in the bonds of the Gospel; as in I Thess. v, 14. "Now we exhort you brethren warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient towards all men; see that none render evil for evil to any man, &c." The reasonableness of this interpretation will be evident from a consideration of the following: "Rebuke not an elder but intreat him as a father." I Tim. v, 1. Why, Paul, you must surely be mistaken; isn't Timothy superior to the elders? and has he not power to "enforce them to their duty" and if need be "judicially pass sentence upon them?" Why, then, do you say "rebuke not an elder, but exort him as a father." Why, Paul, you are beside yourself; you are opposed to all antiquity and to the "Catholic Apostolic Church of England!" Now, Paul let me ask you, how will his "Lordship" Timothy 'enforce obedience' if he cannot "rebuke" the elders? Don't you see, Paul! by this restriction you reduce his "Lordship" to the level of an elder? Nay, you put his Lordship in subjection to the "elder" if his Lordship must "entreat him as a father?" Yes, "Timothy," that is just what Paul means! you received your commission from a board of Elders called a "presbytery," you are, therefore, to be in subjection to them as your "father in God." Timothy, then, as presiding elder in the presbytery was not to "receive an accusation" against a brother "elder" but "at the mouth of two or three witnesses."

With this compare St. Peter's exhortation to the elders, I Peter v, 1—"The elders who are among you I exhort, who am also an elder and a witness of the sufferings of Christ," or as it is in the revised version, "who am a fellow elder." Yes, Peter, (the "chief and very Pope," as some say of the Apostles) speaking by inspiration, calls himself an "elder," and he exhorts his fellow elders," he does not command as a superior. Had Peter seen fit to "command," I suppose none would have questioned his right as an "inspired" Apostle; but, no, he exhorts, he intreats his co-elders as brethren, as "fellow elders," even though he was a "witness of the sufferings of Christ;" yet he did not consider himself a "superior" entitled to command and "enforce obedience."

In view of the foregoing we ask, "What becomes of Mr. Ward's 'third order'?" If Peter was but an 'elder' the other apostles would be elders also; yet we are told that Timothy and Titus belonged to "another order which was superior to and had authority over" the elders.

Mr Ward affirms that "there were three orders in the Apostolic Church;" the Apostles Peter and Paul affirm the contrary—which are we to believe, Mr. Ward or the divinely inspired apostles? The Reformers of the sixteenth century—Luther, Melancthon, Calvin and others on the continent, and Cranmer, Latimer and their associates in England; taught that there were but two orders of ministers in the Primitive Church and even Paley of recent times merely pleads for Episcopacy as permissable and expedient as being "neither forbidden or enjoined in the New Testament" as expedient in modern times because calculated as he argues "to win the attention and respect of the nobility and aristocracy." In Paul's epistle to the Philippians he addresses "the saints in Christ Jesus who are at Philippi with the bishops and deacons"—Phil. i. 1. An unaccountable omission if there were three orders in the church, the second order being evidently ignored. Again we affirm that we no where find in the New Testament three orders of ministers classed together. We have as we have seen "bishops and deacons," but nowhere do we meet with "bishops, priests and deacons" as in the Church of England.

The notion, therefore, that there were three orders of ministers in the primitive church and that bishops were superior to Presbyters meets with no countenance from the New Testment. It arose in after times and has no apostolic or scripture authority. We must therefore regard the Episcopal form of church government as a departure from the model presented in the New Testament. We now close Part III.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

SYSTEM IN FARMING.

There is perhaps no department of business in which a definite and consistent system of management is so much needed as in farming. In England and Scotland, where an extended experience is the guide in practice, and where, from the great value of land, the highest rents are paid by the tenant farmers, we find in each locality a very general conformity to a well-planned system of farm practice, which is reasonably claimed, under the circumstances, to give the best results. The low price of the virgin soils of America, when first brought under cultivation, together with a lack of markets for a variety of products, and the many other conditions inseparable from the settlement of a new country, have led to habits of practice that are perhaps best defined by their lack of system. Under these conditions, presented in what may be called pioneer farming, the tendency is to grow, almost exclusively, some particular crop, that commands a ready sale at paying prices, without taking into consideration the effects of its continuous growth on the future productiveness of the soil. The pioneer who is subjected to the hardships and privations that are of necessity connected with the first settlement of a new country, is undoubtedly to receive the full benefit of the accumulated riches of the soil he brings under cultivation, and the "scouring" practice he resorts to, although uniformly censured by theoretical writers, is without doubt, under the circumstances, the best he can possibly adopt for his own immediate interests.—Dr. MANLY MILES, in American Agriculturist for October.

ROOT-CELLARS. The leading features of a good root cellar are, proof against frost, neatness, dryness, ventilation, and cheapness. If a hill-side is conveniently near, it helps much to secure the desired ends. An excavation should be first made, in size depending upon the required capacity of the cellar, and in this erect a stout frame of timbers—posts with plank, or a log pen, and on which place a stout roof. The earth that has been excavated is thrown over the structure, until the whole is covered to the depth of two feet. A door should be made in the exposed end of the cellar, through which the roots may be put in and taken out. The smaller the [illegible] still be convenient, the [illegible] it allows to less exposure to [illegible]. A quantity of straw pressed in the door-way, will aid greatly in keeping out the frost. Every [illegible] with many roots to be stored, [illegible] have a root-cellar, either by [illegible] to the lower part of the barn, [illegible] well to store a large quantity of roots in the cellar of the house, [illegible] rising from them during [illegible] sickness to the in[illegible]. American Agriculturist for [illegible]

[illegible] It is no vile [illegible] pretending to be made [illegible] foreign roots, barks, &c. puffed up by long bogus certificates [illegible] miraculous cures, [illegible] pure, effective medicine, [illegible] remedies, [illegible] certificates by [illegible] Hop Bitters, [illegible] of medicines.

He splashed [illegible] with brook mud, tore his clothing [illegible] underbrush, and at [illegible] looked like a volunteer at [illegible] of Bull Run. At night he [illegible] to the hotel and exhibited [illegible] to the verandah's occupants, and related how easy the [illegible] came to grief, how he climbed [illegible] trees to unhitch the line, and [illegible] result was with what [illegible] accomplished. At this [illegible] up well out of [illegible] exclaimed: "Mister, ma [illegible] them fish; they's [illegible] another man; her's yer [illegible]

ACQUIRING AN EDUCATION.

"Why do you wish to leave school [illegible]?" sadly asked the principal of a country school out near Danville, remonstrating with a sandy-haired pupil of twelve years; "you have learned comparatively nothing up to this time."

"I've learned one thing mighty solid [illegible]," persisted the student.

"And what is that?" asked the teacher.

"I've learned that a mistake in spelling [illegible] fetches a boy a cuff on the [illegible] keeps a big girl in two hours after school."

"You're [illegible]," said the principal, handing the boy his books, "you should have left school three years ago."

WHAT EVERY ONE SAYS MUST BE TRUE.

All unite in praise of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry who have tried its efficacy in curing Cholera Morbus, Cramps, Dysentery, Nausia, and Stomach and Bowel Complaints, generally in children or adults. Every person should keep a supply on hand.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR.—If you have any curiosity to hear somewhat about the Down Settlement for the convenience of your readers we will take them along the Collingwood road to what is known as McCombs corner, thence east one concession. The corner lot belongs to Mr. A. Down, on which there is erected a new brick house, which when finished, will be equal to any in the country for comfort and conveniance. I understand that J. Hanbury done the brick work and R. Byers the wood work with which Mr. D. is highly satisfied. The next on that line is Mr. P. Holeman, who has also a very fine house nearly new which is of frame structure very handsomely painted; Mr. J. Simmings and Mr. S. Bageros have also very fine houses, and I may add that the above named men have their barns and out buildings quite in keeping with their dwelling houses, and to see their well cleaned up fields and fences would be decided proof of thrift and taste. Their farms are of clay loam and lies in a position to receive the first rays of the morning sun. The mark of taste does not stop at home with those men. But when they go to mill or market they take out clean well mended bags, if not now, with strings on each and the best samples of grain, well cleaned and always calls forth the height of the market. Many would profit by taking a hint from the success of those men and quit coming to market with a number of lbs, of hay and pea straw for patches, hay and oats straw for strings, grain not half fanned, and the pain of grumbling that they got 20cts less per bushel than their neighbour. One can tell what sort of a wife a farmer has by the bags which are sent to mill or Market; many complain of their fanning mill that can be very easily reminded Mr. Wm. Strain has on hand a number of the best mills in the country that can be bought very reasonable, either on time or for cash. When you come in sight of the above named settlement you would think it was a youthful village springing up, in fact it would be hard to find a mile of any road in the country with the same appearance. Mr. Thos Addison has a very nice house and lot on the corner on which is erected a blacksmith shop; and Mr. J. Foresoythe is going to build a waggon shop this fall. We are personally acquainted with those men and never heard any one say aught against his neighbour but on the best of terms with both themselves and their wives. I might say to, that many a man has went to the Down settlement for a wife lately and is not sorry he did. If I got out again I will let you know about some other settlement.

To find a better remedy for dyspepsia, indigestion, and impurities of the blood, than the Burdock Blood Bitters. Price $1 00, trial bottles 10 cents.

There are four murders a day on the average in London. The population of that city alone is nearly equal to that of Ireland, and about 100,000 more than that of Scotland.

The salt mines of Cheshire and Worcester, England, yield so abundantly that the supply is sufficient for entire country, and more than half a million tons are exported annually.

THE ANGLER'S CONFESSION.

I've angled in many waters,
On many a summer's day,
By many a murmuring river,
In many a tangled way;
And the voice of the brook has never
Lost its pathos and charm for me,
As it ripples and runs for ever
To its home in the mighty sea.

These were the days of the angler,
In the flush of innocent youth,
Told all his simple story—
Told nothing but the truth.
"I fished the stream near the milldam
Hour after hour in vain;
I've not a trout in my basket,
To morrow I'll try it again.

But now, alas! this bosom
Is shockingly changed; I fear
I've learned to lie like others,
In the angling months of the year.
"Fishing? I rather think so,
A hundred in half a day—
Two pounders and strong—such monsters,
Each took me an hour to play."

I've learned to lie like others,
I've gone to the stream and found
A small boy fishing before me;
Then prone on the pleasant ground
I've lain, and slumbered, and bid him
Call me when he had caught
Just enough to fill my basket,
And thus my fish were bought.

Then over my nice clean stockings
I've plastered the river mud,
And the sleeves of my angling jacket
I've smeared with the fishes' blood;
And strolled to the ferry landing
With a weary look in my eye,
Then revelled for days succeeding
In one long luxurious lie.

How I fell from the massive boulder,
Aow I swam the turbulent brook,
How in pool four and twenty
Speckled beauties I took.
Men may rave of the joys of angling,
But let them not despise
The pure, the æsthetic pleasure
That dwells in such angling lies.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

—:o:—

'You would not dare,' he said huskily; 'you wretch! you would not dare—'

'I would dare anything except being late for Miss Dangerfield's birth-night party. Just seventeen! a charming age, and an heiress, and a beauty, no doubt? Ah! what a contrast to my waning youth. I grow melancholly when I think of it. I was seventeen once, too, Sir John, though to look at me now you mightn't believe it. Ring the bell, please, and let that nice old creature, your housekeeper, show me to my room. And when I'm ready—say, ten o'clock—you will come for me here, and present me to your guests. No, really, baronet, not another word to-night on that subject. These serious matters are so exhausting; and remember, I've been travelling all day. Ring the bell.'

He hesitated a moment, then obeyed. The look of a hunted animal was in his eyes, and she stood there mocking him to his face. It seemed about as unequal a contest as a battle between a huge Newfoundland and a little King Charles, and the King Charles had the victory this time.

Mrs. Harrison answered the bell; in the brief interval no word had been spoken.

'You will show Mrs. Vavasor to her room,' Sir John said, shortly and sternly, turning to go.

'And I will be dressed by ten, and you will call for me here,' said Mrs. Vavasor, gayly, over her shoulder. 'How fortunate I have been in not missing the opportunity of offering my congratulations to Miss Dangerfield.'

And then humming a gay French air, Mrs. Vavasor followed the housekeeper up another broad oaken stairway, along a carpeted corridor and into a velvet-hung chamber, bright with firelight and waxlight, luxuriant with cushions, chairs, and lounges, fragrant with hot-house flowers, and rich with pictures.

'Your trunks are in the wardrobe adjoining, ma'am,' Mrs. Harrison said, 'and if there is anything I can do, or if Miss Katherine's maid—'

'You good creature!' Mrs. Vavasor answered. 'No, I am my own maid—I haven't eight thousand a year, you know, like your darling, Miss Katherine, and can't afford luxuries. Thanks, very much; and—good-night; and then the door closed gently in the housekeeper's face, the key was turned and Sir John's guest was alone.

She stood and looked around the room with a smile, that incessant smile that grew just a trifle wearisome after the first half hour or so.

In the golden gleam of the light the tall mirrors flashed, the carpet looked like a green bank of June roses, the silken draperies shimmered, and the exotics in their tall glasses perfumed the warm air. Outside the rain beat, and the wind blew, and the 'blackness of darkness' reigned. She listened to the wild beating of the storm in the park with a delicious shiver.

'Is it like my life?' she said softly. 'Have I come out of the rain, and the night, to the roses, and waxlights, and music of existence. Or is the gypsy, vagabond instinct too strong in me, and will the roses fade, and their perfume sicken, and the lights grow dim, and I throw it all up some day, and go back to the old freedom and outlawry once more? The cedar palace and purple robes of the king look very inviting, but I think I would rather have the tents of Bohemia, with their freedom, and the stars shining through the canvas roof.'

An hour later there descended to the long drawing-room, a lady—a stranger to all there. She appeared in their midst as suddenly as though she had dropped from the rainy skies, a charming little vision, in amber silk and Chantilly flounces, and diamonds and creamy roses in her floating feathery black hair. A little lady whose cheeks outshone all roses, whose eyes outflashed her diamonds, and whom Sir John introduced to his guests as Mrs. Vavasor.

Who was Mrs. Vavasor?

Women looked at her askance—the stamp of adventuress was on her face and raiment.

The rouge was artistic, but it was rouge; the amber silk was shabby, the Chantilly, a very clever imitation, the diamonds Palais Royal beyond doubt. And then Sir John was so pale, so gloomy—the old soldier, not used to society masks, showed his trouble all too plainly in his perturbed face.

A woman not of their order—and the ladies' bows were frigid and chilling as the baronet presented her.

But the men—what did they know of shabby silks and brownish laces. They saw a brilliant fairy of—well, five-and-twenty summers, perhaps—by lamplight—with the eyes and teeth of a goddess.

'But Miss Dangerfield, Sir John—Miss Dangerfield! Miss Dangerfield!' Mrs. Vavasor cried, tapping him playfully with her fan; 'those people are not the rose, though they have come to-night to do honor to that gorgeous flower. I'm dying to behold Miss Dangerfield.'

The stormy blue eye of the Indian officer flashed; he gnawed his moustache with an oath only heard by the lady on his arm. Her shrill laugh answered it.

'For shame, Sir John! So ill-bred, too! And that face! You look like the Death's-head the Egyptians used to have at their banquets. What will people say? There, I see her—I see her! that is Katherine.'

She stopped short, still holding Sir John's arm, and a vivid light came into her black eyes. The baronet's daughter was advancing on the arm of Mr. Gaston Dantree.

'Katherine,' her father said, bringing out every word with a husky effort, 'this is Mrs. Vavasor, a very old fri—acquaintance.' If his life had been at stake, he could not have said 'friend.' 'You have heard me speak of her; she is our guest for the present.'

He turned abruptly and walked away.

Katherine Dangerfield held out her hand—for the first and the last time—to her father's acquaintance. Their eyes met, and on the only occasion, perhaps, in all her seven-and thirty years of life, those of the elder woman fell. The bright gray eyes of the girl looked straight through her, and distrusted and disliked her with that first glance.

'My father's friends are always welcome to Scarswood.' She said it very briefly and coldly. 'May I beg of you to excuse me now? I am engaged for this waltz to Mr. Dantree.'

She was looking her best to-night and almost pretty; but then 'almost' is a very wide word.

She wore pink tissue that floated about her like a rosy mist, with here and there a touch of priceless old peint, and a tiny cluster of fairy roses. She had pearls on her neck, and gleaming through her lovely auburn hair, a rich tea rose nestling in the silken brown.

She looked graceful; she looked unspeakably patrician; she carried herself like a young princess. And the vivid light in Mrs. Vavasor's black eyes grew brighter as she watched her float away.

'She has her mother's face,' she whispered to herself; 'she has her mother's face! A home in Scarswood for ever, the fleshpots of Egypt, the purple and fine linen high life, would be very pleasant things, but revenge is pleasanter still.'

One of the gentlemen to whom she had, at her own special request, been introduced, came up, as she stood, and solicited the pleasure of a waltz.

'I am sure you can waltz,' he said; 'I can always tell, by some sort of Terpsichorean instinct, I suppose, when a lady is, or is not, a waltzer.'

Mr. Peter Dangerfield was right at least in this particular instance; Mrs. Vavasor waltzed like a fairy—like a French fairy at that.

She and the baronet's daughter whirled past each other more than once—Katherine with her brown hair floatin gin a perfumed cloud, her lips breathless and apart, and her bright eyes laughing in her partner's face.

'Is she in love with that very handsome young man, I wonder?' Mrs. Vavasor thought; 'and is he rich, and in love with her? If so, then my plan of vengeance may be frustrated yet.'

'Mr. Dangerfield,' to her partner, 'please tell me the name of that gentleman with whom Miss Dangerfield is dancing. It strikes me I have somewhere seen his face before.'

'Not unlikely, he's been everywhere. His name is Gaston Dantree, and he is, I believe, a native of the State of Louisiana.'

'An American? He is very rich, then—all those Americans are very rich.'

'Dantree is not. By his own showing, he is poor as a church mouse; his only wealth is his Grecian profile and his tenor voice.' The was just a tinge of bitterness in his tone as he looked after the handsome Southener and his partner.

"My face is my fortune, sir, she said."

hummed gayly Mrs. Vavasor. 'How, then, comes monsieur to be here, and evidently first favourite in the regards of Sir John's heiress?'

'His handsome face and musical tenor again. Miss Dangerfield met him at a concert, not three weeks ago, and behold the result! We poor devils, minus classic noses, arched eyebrows, and the voices of archangels, stand out in the cold and gaze afar off at him in Paradise.'

'Does Sir John like it?'

'Sir John will like whatever his daughter likes. Any human creature persistent enough can do as they please with Sir John. For his daughter he is her abject slave.'

The bitterness was bitterer than ever in Mr. Peter Dangerfield's voice; evidently the heiress of Scarswood and her handsome Southerner were sore subjects.

He was a pale-faced, under-sized young man, with very light hair and eyes—so light that he was hopelessly near-sighted—and a weak, querulous voice. It was just a little hard to see Scarswood slipping out of the family before his very eyes through the headstrong whims of a novel-reading, beauty-loving chit of a girl.

He, too, was poor—poor as Gaston Dantree himself—and at thirty, mammon was the god of his idolatry, and to reign one day at Scarswood, the perpetual longing of his life.

'And Miss Dangerfield is a young lady whose slaves must obey, I think; and Scarswood will go out of the family. Such a pity, Mr. Dangerfield! Now, I should think you might prevent that.'

She made this audacious home thrust looking full in his pale, thin face, with her black, resolute eyes.

The blood flushed redly to the roots of his dull yellow hair.

'I! My dear madame,'—with a hard laugh—'I stand no chance. I'm not a handsome man.'

'Miss Dangerfield—I am a woman, and may say so—is not a handsome girl.'

'All the greater reason why she should worship beauty in others. Gaston Dantree, without a sou in his pocket, a foreigner, an adventurer, for all we know to the contrary, will one day reign lord of Scarswood. See them now! Could anything be more lover-like than they are, Mrs. Vavasor?'

He spoke to her as though he had known her for years. Some rapport had made those two friends at once.

She looked where he pointed, her smile and glance at their brightest.

The waltz had ended; leaning on her handsome partner's arm, the last flutter of Miss Dangerfield's pink dress vanished in the conservatory.

'I see; and in spite of appearances, Mr. Dangerfield, I wouldn't mind betting—my diamonds, say, against that botanical specimen in your buttonhole—that Mr. Gaston Dantree, Grecian profile, tenor voice, and all, will NEVER reign lord of Scarswood; and for you—why you know the old rhyme:

"'He either dreads his fate too much,
Or his desserts are small,
Who fears to put it to the touch,
To win or lose it all.'"

She walked away with her last words, her ever-mocking laugh coming back to him where he stood. What did the woman mean? How oddly she looked and spoke. How could she prevent Gaston Dantree marrying Katherine? But the last advice was good—why despair before speaking?

'To win or lose it all!' repeated Peter Dangerfield, stroking his feeble colourless moustache. 'By George! I will try. She can but say no.'

There was a call for Mr. Dantree on the instant—Mr. Dantree was wanted to sing.

Mr. Dangerfield stood where he was, and saw the dark-eyed tenor emerge leisurely from the conservatory, and—alone. He sat down at the piano; his slender, shapely hands flew over the keys in a brilliant prelude. Everybody was listening—now was his time. Katherine was in the conservatory yet. He made his way slowly down the long vista of rooms to where, at the extreme end, the green brightness of tropic plants gleamed in the lamplight.

She still stood where her late companion had left her, in the recess of a window, her robe of pink tissue shining rosily, her jewels glancing softly. Tall tropic plants spread their fan-like leaves about her; the air was rich and faint with exotic odours; and over all the soft, abundant light poured down.

Gaston Dantree's song floated in—an Irish song, half gay, half sad, wholly sweet—and a brooding tenderness lay on the girl's face—a great happiness new and sweet—and made it almost beautiful. The rain lashed the windows, the wind of the October night blew in long, lamentable blasts through the rocking trees; but the storm and darkness without only made the contrast within the more brilliant.

'Katherine!'

She neither saw no heard him until he was close at her side. She lifted up her dreamy eyes, her trance of bliss was over.

'Oh, you, Peter! What an odious habit you have of stealing in upon one like a cat. I never heard you.'

You never heard me, Miss Dangerfield! You need hardly tell me that. You were listening far too intently to Mr. Gaston Dantree to hear anything else.'

'Was I?' retorted Katherine. They rarely met, these two, except to quarrel. 'Well, all I can say is that Mr. Gaston Dantree is very well worth listening to, which is more than I can say for you, cousin Peter.'

'You mean I'm not a singing man, I suppose, Kathie? Well, I admit my brains do not lie in my throat and lungs.'

'Nor anywhere else, Mr. Dangerfield.'

'And when is it to be, Kathie?' Mr. Dangerfield demanded, folding his arms; 'when are we all to offer our congratulations? Such a flirtation as yours, my dear cousin, with this Apollo Belvidere from the Southern States, can have but one ending.'

'And such a flirtation as yours with this pretty Mrs. Vavasor, from nobody knows where, can have but one ending, too, I suppose,' responded Katherine, coming up to time, bravely. 'She is some five or six years your senior, I should think; but where true love exists, what does a little disparity of years signify? A case of love at sight; was it not, cousin?'

'You might have spared me that taunt, Katherine; you know very well who it is I am so unfortunate as to love.'

'Upon my word, I don't. My little cousin Peter, his loves and hates are subjects that trouble me very slightly. There! Mr. Dantree's song is done, and they are playing the Lancers. Suppose we leave off quarrelling and go and have a cousinly quadrille?'

'Not yet, Kathie. I can endure this suspense no longer. No, you shall not go; I will be heard! To watch you as I have watched you to-night with that man, would simply drive me mad!'

'Would it? Then why on earth do you do it? I don't want to be watched, and I don't suppose Mr. Dantree does, either. You mean Mr. Dantree, don't you? And, Peter, don't put on that tragic face; it isn't your style, dear. You're too fair complexioned. And what business is it of yours, and why should it drive you mad?'

'Little need to ask, Katherine. You know only too well—because I love you. Kathie, don't look like that! I love you, and you know it well. I haven't had thoughts or eyes for any living creature but you since you first came here. Ah, Kathie! Listen to me. Don't laugh, as I see you are going to. I love you with all my heart—better than ever that fellow can do—and I ask you to be my wife. Katherine, don't laugh at me, for Heaven's sake!'

But the warning came too late.

Katherine broke out into a ringing peal of laughter, that the music happily drowned.

Peter Dangerfield looked desperately in earnest, very, very yellow, and with folded arms, stood glaring at her in an uncommonly savage way for so tender a declaration.

'I beg your pardon, Peter, but I can't help it. The idea of marrying you—only five feet five inches, and an attorney, and my first cousin! First cousins should never marry, you know. What would papa say, you silly little boy, if he could hear this?'

'My uncle knows,' the young man answered, with sullen anger; 'I spoke to him a month ago.'

Miss Dangerfield opened her big, gray eyes.

'Oh, you did! That's what he meant then, that morning after the concert. I remember; he tried to plead your cause. And you spoke to him first; and you're a lawyer, and knew no better than that! No, Peter it is not possible. You're a nice little fellow, and I think a great deal of you; and I would do almost anything you wanted me except—marry you.—That's a little too much, even for such a good nature as mine.'

'Then I am to consider myself rejected?'

'Now, Peter, don't put on that ill-tempered face; it quite spoils your good looks, and you have none to spoil—spare I mean. Well, yes, then; I am afraid you must consider yourself rejected. I should really like to oblige you in this matter, but you perceive I can't. Come, let us make it up—I am not angry—and take me back to the drawing-room for my dance. It is a sin to miss such music as that.'

'In one moment, Katherine. Will you answer me this, please? Is it for Gaston Dantree I am refused?'

'Cousin Peter, I shall lose my temper if you keep on. If there were no Mr. Dantree in the case I should reject you all the same. You are very well as a first cousin; as a husband—excuse me! I would not marry you if you were the only man left in the world, and the penalty of refusing you be to go to my grave an old maid. Is that answer decisive enough?'

'Very nearly! Thank you for plain speaking, Kathie.' He was white with suppressed anger. 'But lest we should misunderstand each other in the least won't you tell me whether or no Mr Dantree is to be the future lord of Scarswood Park? Because in that case for the honor of the family, I should endeavor to discover the gentleman's antecedents. A classic profile and a fine voice for singing may be sufficient virtues in the eyes of a young lady of seventeen, but I am afraid they will hardly satisfy the world or Sir John.'

'For the world I don't care that! For Sir John, whatever makes me happy will satisfy him. I am trying to keep my temper, Peter, don't provoke me too far—it is not safe. Will you, or will you not, take me out for the dance, I am not accustomed to ask favors twice.'

How queenly she says it—the heiress of Scarswood Park.

His passion is not to be restrained now. 'And it is for this Yankee singing man—this needy adventurer—this negro minstrel in his own land, that I am cast off;'

She whirled round upon him in a storm of sudden fury, and made a step toward him. But rage lent him courage; he stood his ground.

'You little wretch!' cried Miss Dangerfield, 'how dare you stand there and say such things to me?—How dare you call Gaston Dantree an adventurer? You, who would not dare to call your soul your own in his presence! Negro minstrel, indeed! You wretched little attorney! One should be a gentleman to judge gentlemen. That is why Mr. Dantree is beyond your judgment! Don't ever speak to me again. Your very offer is an insult. To think that I—I would ever marry you, a little rickety dwarf.'

And then dead silence fell.

I don't uphold this heroine of mine—her temper is abominable, I allow; but the moment the last words passed her lips her heart smote her. Peter Dangerfield stood before her as white as death, and trembled so that he was forced to grasp a gilded flower stand for support.

'Oh, Peter! I am sorry!' she cried out; 'I didn't mean that!—I didn't! I didn't!—forgive it—forget it—my temper is horrible—I am a wretch, but you know,' suffering a slight relapse, 'it was all your own fault. Shake hands, cousin; and oh, do—no—do forget my wicked words!'

But he drew back from the outstretched hands, smiling a ghastly smile enough.

'Forget them? Certainly Cousin Katherine! I am not the sort of a fellow to bear spite. You are very good and all that, but if it is the same to you, I'll not shake hands. And I won't keep you from dancing that quadrille any longer. I will not your partner—I don't dance as well as Mr. Dantree, and I see him coming this way now. Excuse me for having troubled you with this presumptuous love of mine; I won't do it again.'

Then he turned away, and Gaston Dantree, looking like a picture in a frame, stood in the rose-wreathed entrance arch.

'I am sorry, and I have apologised,' Katherine said coldly. 'I can do no more.'

'No more is needed. Pray don't keep Mr. Dantree waiting. And I would rather he did not come here just now.'

'Come, Kathie,' Mr. Dantree called softly.

It had come to that, then; it was 'Kathie' and 'Gaston.' He saw him draw her hand under his arm as one having the right; whisper something in her ear that lit her face with sunshine, and lead her away.

Peter Dangerfield stood alone. He watched them quite out of sight—his teeth, his face perfectly colorless, and a look in his small eyes bad to see.

'I have read of men who sold their souls to the devil for a price,' he said, between his teeth. 'I suppose the days for such bargains are over, and souls are plentiful enough in the kingdom of his dark majesty, without paying a farthing. But if those days could come again, and Satan stood beside me, I would sell my soul now for revenge on you.'

'Are you sure you have one to sell?' a clear sharp voice close behind him said, 'I never thought lawyers were troubled with those inconvenient appendages—hearts and souls. Well, if you have, keep it; it is of no use to me. And I am not Satan, either, but yet I think for a fair price I can give you your revenge.'

He whiled round with a stifled exclamation, and saw at his elbow—Mrs. Vavasor.

CHAPTER III.

AMONG THE ROSES.

She stood beside him, with her ceaseless smile at its brightest on her small face, looking like some female Mephistophles come to tempt a modern Faust. He put up his eye-glass too look at her. What a gorgeous little creature she was! It was his first thought.

In the dim yellow light of the conservatory, the amber silk glistened with its pristine lustre, the yellow roses she wore made such an admirable foil to her dead black hair.

'What the deuce brings me here? Don't trouble yourself to ask the question, mon ami, your face asks it for you. I've been eavesdropping,' in her airiest tone; 'not intentionalty, you understand,' as the young man continued to stare speechlessly at her through his eye-glass. 'Entering the conservatory by the merest chance, I overheard Miss Dangerfield's last words to you; 'a little more than kin, and less than kind,' were they not? Permit to congratulate you, Mr. Dangerfield.'

'Congratulate me!' Mr. Dangerfield replied, dropping his double-barrelled eye-glass and glowering vengefully at the fair creature by his side. 'In heavens name, on what?'

'On having escaped becoming the husband of a termagant. Believe not even Scarswood and eight thousand a year would counterbalance so attrocious a temper as that.'

'Eight thousand a year would counterbalance with me even a worse temper than that, Mrs. Vavasor,' the lawyer answered grimly. 'I am only sorry I am not to have the opportunity of trying. Once my wife, I think I could correct the acidity of even Katherine Dangerfield's temper and tongue.'

'No you could not. Petruchio himself would fail to tame this shrew.—You see, Lr Mangerfield, I speak from past experience. I know what kind of blood flows in our spirited Catherines veins.'

'Very good blood, then, I am sure—very good tempered, too, in the main—at least, on the father's side.'

'Ah! on the father,s side!' The sneer with which this was said is indiscribable. 'May I ask if you know her mother, Mr. Dangerfield.?

'Certainly I did—a ducedly fine woman, too, and as amiable as she was handsome. Colonel Dangerfield—Sir John was colonel then—married a Miss Lascelles, and Katherine was born in this very house, while they were making their Christmas visit.—You may have known her father and mother—you certainly seem to know Sir John suspiciously well—but don't tell me Katherine took her tantrums from either of them—I know better.'

Mrs. Vavasor listened quietly, adjusting her bracelets, and burst out laughing when he ceased.

'I see you do—you know all about it. How old was Katherine when her father and mother left England for India?'

'Two or three years, or thereabouts. It seems to me—being so well acquainted, and all that, as you say—you ought to know yourself. Was it in England or India you came to know the Governor so well?'

'In neither, Mr. Dangerfield.'

'Or does your acquaintence extend only to the baronet? Gad! he looked like an incarnate thunder-cloud when presenting you. His past remembrances must be uncommonly pleasant ones, I should say. Did you know the late Mrs. Colonel Dangerfield, Mrs. Vavasor?'

'I knew the late Mrs. Colonel Dangerfield, Mr. Dangerfield.'

'And yet you say Katherine takes her temper from her mother. My late aunt-in-law must have greatly changed, then, from the time I saw her last.'

'I repeat it,' Mrs. Vavasor said, tapping her fan. Katherine inherits her most abominable temper from her mother—the only inheritance her mother left her. And she looks like her—wonderfully like her—so like.' Mrs. Vavasor repeated in a strange, suppressed voice, 'that I could almost take her for a ghost in pink gauze.'

'Like her mother!' cried Peter Dangerfield. 'I beg your pardon, Mrs. Vavasor, but you must be dreaming. She is no more like her mother than I am. The late Mrs. Dangerfield was a handsome woman.'

SET BACK 42 YEARS.—I was troubled for many years with Kidney Complaint, Gravel, &c.; my blood became thin; I was dull and inactive; could hardly crawl about; was an old worn out man all over; could get nothing to help me, until I got Hop Bitters, and now I am a boy again. My blood and kidneys are all right, and I am as active as a man of 30, although I am 72, and I have no doubt it will do as well for others of my age. It is worth a trial.—(Father.)—Sunday Mercury.

The London World says that those who are fond of the heavy wines of the south of France, the vins du Rhome, such as St. Georges, Rousillon, Chateau Neuf du Pape, etc., will be sorry to hear that the vintage will be nill. The grapes have been entirely destroyed by insects. It is the same in some parts of the Bordeaux district. According to the same journal, the entire Clos Vougeot vintage is bought, and has been for many years, by the owner of the world renowned buffet at Dijon.

FALL ASSIZES.

WEDNESDAY.

ROBERTSON vs. CARNEY et al.—It will be remembered that last fall the Captain of the Frances Smith was convicted by magistrates at Sault Ste. Marie for permitting liquor to be sold to the Indians from the boat; but on appeal to the Court at Toronto the conviction was quashed. While making his appeal he had to deposit $460 with the magistrates for penalties and costs, but which he recieved back again. He now sued the magistrates for receiving excessive fees. Judgment for defendant with costs, on the ground that the magistrates never received the fees, they being only deposited by way of security in place of giving a bond. John Creasor, Q. C., for plaintiff; Jno. M. Hamilton for defendants.

THURSDAY.

YATES vs. FARQUHARSON.—This case arose out of a row at a logging bee in the township of Sydenham, at which Yates was badly hurt by Farquharson and rendered unable to do his usual work. He now sued for damages. Verdict for plaintiff, $200. Jno. Creasor, Q. C., for plaintiff; Jas. Mason for defendant.

QUEEN vs. FARQUHARSON.—This was a criminal action arising out of the same row as previous case, but as the defendant had already been punished in the civil suit, the prosecution was dropped.

DAVIS et al vs. WATSON.—Action of trespass. The plantiff not being prepared to go on, the case was dismissed with costs.

MCFARLAND vs. WILLIAMS.—Action of ejectment. S. J. Lane, Q. C., for plaintiff; Jas. Mason for defendant. Judgment reserved.

LUKE vs. BEST.—This was an action for slander. When the case was called, the plaintiff did not appear, and the case was dismissed with costs.

QUEEN vs. JOHN MATHESON.—Prisoner was tried on a charge of uttering forged Dominion notes, the particulars of which we gave last year when the affair occurred. The evidence went to show that he went to pass one of bills, but it was shown that he knew it had been altered. Verdict—Not guilty. A. Frost for the Crown; Jno. Creasor, Q. C., for the defence.

QUEEN vs. BARBARA RYAN.—This case was connected with the last. It was shown that the prisoner had offered a $5 bill at Mr. John Tucker's, which was refused by Miss Tucker, who showed her that it had been raised from a $1. She afterward passed the same bill on Mr. George McDougall. Verdict—Guilty. Sentenced to six months in gaol. A. Frost for the Crown; John Creasor, Q. C., for the defence.

Louisa Caroline Feathers, who had pleaded guilty to the charge of forgery was sent for one year to Mercer Female Reformatory.

Language fails me to express the feelings of the Directors to those who so nobly aided them in their efforts to make the show a success, by bringing pictures, flowers and other work to adorn their new agricultural hall and add to the attractions to be seen. I am sure I but feebly express their feelings when I say they are thankful to Mrs. Phillips for bringing out such an exhibit of fancy work without any hope of reward, but to add to the attractions of the show; nor do they want to forget Master Easton's pencil drawing, which was much admired. Hoping those whose names are omitted in this short notice of thanks will not be offended,

I remain, yours truly,

To the Editor.

DEAR SIR,—As I am from the vicinity of Markdale, it may be of interest to some of the readers of your valuable paper, if I give through your columns a short account of my journey west.

I left home on the 12th of July, and reached here in thirteen days. We sailed from Owen Sound on a boat called the Manitoulin to Sault Ste. Marie, and were unfortunate enough to take the Winnipeg from there to Duluth. There was about seventy passengers on board, and the weather being fine, all seemed to enjoy the trip well; but on reaching Duluth dock the scene was changed. We reached the dock about 1:30 a.m., and all the passengers and most of the crew had went to bed about 12, intending to sleep until morning, as the boat was not going to leave the dock that day, little expecting to be awakened by the cry of fire. I remember hearing the whistle blow on striking the dock, and then I heard the cry of fire, but I could scarcely believe that the persons doing the shouting meant all they said, and I did not get up as soon as I might, but when my partner, Mr. R. McKenzie, came to the door of my state-room and called for me to get out, that the boat was on fire, I began to fully realize my position, and picking up my coat, vest, and overcoat, I got out of there just as fast as I knew how. I threw my clothes on the wharf and ran back for my valise, but the baggage room was so full of smoke that I couldn't see, and I took another man's valise instead of my own. I then done what I could to help save some of the passengers, but I suppose you had full particulars at the time it happened, so I need not be giving you details. When the fire was over, I found I had either dropped my vest in running out or some one had picked it up off the wharf, so I was minus of most of my clothes, watch and some money, but I felt thankful that I got off as safe as I did. Many of the passengers lost all their clothes except what they were sleeping in.

After staying two days in Duluth, a party of thirty of us started for the Yellow Stone Valley, by the Northern Pacific R. R. The road for a considerable distance runs close to the St. Mary's River, and there is some splendid scenery, sometimes we appeared to be sweeping along a hundred feet above the water. I like the appearance of the country through Minnesota and Dakota very well, but the crops appeared to be very light. Harvest had just commenced when we passed through. There is hundreds of miles of land in the western part of Dakota on the road, not taken up yet. If any one from Artemesia is thinking of settling in Dakota, I would advise them to have a look at the land round Antilope Station. In the afternoon of the third we cross the line into Montana, and in the evening we reach Glendive, a small village at the end of the road. I will venture a description of this wonderful place. I think there is about fifty places of business, it has an Opera House, Dance House, and a Music Hall, and the balance in restaurants and saloons, all of which are under canvas or mud covered huts.

Of our party of thirty which left Duluth only nine reached the Yellow Stone Valley. Many were the stories told us about Indians, rattlesnakes, bad water, &c., but as yet I see no cause of fear; the water is very good, it is true there is plenty of Indians and rattlesnakes, but both seem harmless if they are not interfered with. We started out on foot up the Yellow Stone and walked twenty five miles, I felt as if I had walked enough just then, so I hired as assistant cook, and I like the work very well. I am now getting $40 per month and board. My employer having finished his contract here, our outfit consisting of thirty men with six teams, start on a journey of one hundred miles up the Yellow Stone Valley. Now, I must say, for what I have seen of the Valley it is not what it is cracked up to be. I have now travelled over one hundred miles of it, and I have not seen in one place more than 2 or 3 thousand acres of what I would call good land, and it is said that this is the best land in Montana, so I don't think that Montana will ever be considered much of a farming country. The Valley is not more than 7 or 8 miles wide at any place as far west as I have come. Travelling is a great deal different in the West than what I have been used to. When night comes we pull our stove off the waggon, cook our supper, and then spread a canvas on the prairie and our blankets on that, and lay down to sleep. I did not sleep very well at first, but I soon got used to it. We met several ox trains; there is a great difference between ox teaming here and in Artemesia; one man drives as many as thirty-two oxen hitched to a train of seven or eight large covered waggons, coupled short like a train of cars, and the whip he uses would be a clumsy article in the hands of an Artemesia teamster, his whip stock is from two to three feet long with a lash twenty-six.

I only saw grain growing in one place in a hundred miles. We arrived in Mile City Sunday evening, it appears to be a fast little place. Yesterday morning we started from Mile City and forded Tongue River, and in a few minutes we were in Fort Keogh. The Fort is built in a very pretty place. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Richardson, formerly of Markdale, here, I had just time for a few minutes talk with him as our outfit did not stop in the fort, and I did not wish to be left too far behind. Mr. R. is the only man I have seen in Montana that I ever saw before, and he said that I was the only one he had seen.

After we pass a short distance from Fort Keogh we come to an encampment of Cheyenne Indians, I counted about one hundred camps, but there may be a great many more. They have quite a farm. We bought a lot of water melons from them, and they were very good. The squaws were busy drying squashes, pumpkins, buffalo meat and tanning hides; the Indians were either sitting smoking their pipes or saddling their ponies, they seem to have a great number of very nice ponies.

We are now camped about twelve miles above Fort Keogh, and the country does not seem any better than what we have travelled through. I will write no more at present, if I go further West I may write again.

Yours, &c.,

FRANK BEATTIE.

ZOPESA

(FROM BRAZIL.)

The New Compound, its wonderful affinity to the Digestive Apparatus and the Liver, increasing the dissolving juices, relieving almost instantly the dreadful results of Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and the TORPID LIVER, makes Zopesa an every day necessity in every house.

It acts gently and speedily in Biliousness, Costiveness, Headache, Sick Headache, Distress after Eating, Wind on the Stomach, Heartburn, Pains in the Side and Back, Want of Appetite, Want of Energy, Low Spirits, Foul Stomach. It invigorates the Liver, carries off all surplus bile, regulates the Bowels, and gives tone to the whole system.

Cut this out and take it to your Druggist and get a 10 cent Sample, or a large bottle for 75 cents, and tell your neighbor about it.

Span of Mares Stolen.

ONE dark brown, with strip of white down the face—larger towards the nose; two white hind legs; carries head high when driving, and keeps tongue out: will not allow a stranger to groom her without kicking. The other light bay, small size, hollow back, low set, has a small swelling on front of hind leg—is peevish with strangers, and offers to bite any one who attempts to put their hand on her. The above were stolen from the stable of Mrs. Wilson, Lot. 19, con. 5, Albion, on the night of the 25th September, by one Wm. Wilson, of Bolton; about 20 years of age; slim built; round shouldered; bare spot on head behind right ear; dark complexion. $20 reward will be given to any person who will give such information as will lead to the recovery of the horses or the arrest of the thief.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage etc., resulting from excesses.

☞Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts., or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

We notice, one of those beautiful shade trees in front of Mr. Edward Davis' residence has been broken down, and we understand the parties are known who did it. The law is very strict, and the punishment severe for such work. We would like to see it put in force. The trees are certainly doing no person any harm, while they add very much to the appearance of the place.

SOOTHING SYRUPS SUPERCEDED.

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the best remedy for infants teething, it is safe, pleasant and reliable, and cures promptly all forms of Bowel Complaints. For Canadian Cholera or Cholic and Dysentery of either children or adults there is no better remedy.

The Sabbath School Anniversary of the Methodist Church came off on the 11th inst. The weather being favorable there was a fair turn out, yet not as many present as there should be on such occasions. There was good order throughout, and the dialogues and singing were got through with in a creditable manner. Rev. Mr. A. B. DeMill, President of Oshawa Female College, gave a short address, after which the entertainment was brought to a close.

Do you want Men's Long Boots, Boys' Long Boots, Women's Stout Boots, or Children's Strong Boots for the muddy weather? McFARLAND'S is the spot to get them.

A number of sheep belonging to Mr. T. Campbell and Mr. D. McDuffie were worried by dogs on the night of the 8th inst., seven which were killed. In our opinion, nine-tenths of the dogs should be shot, and the balance hung by the neck until dead.

Reynolds & Son want ten thousand (10,000) pairs of Socks and Mits, of the best quality, immediately, to help the suffering in Michigan. Highest price paid.

We notice that Mr. W. J. Speers, who has been absent in Manitoba the past two years, is in town on a visit to his brothers. We believe he returns again to the Great Lone Land in about a month

The Ladies are invited to inspect the new Omba Ribbons, Plushes, Plush Hats, and Lace Novelties opening at McFARLAND'S.

C. W. Speers bought 20 head of cattle at the fair held in Flesherton on Monday last, and drove them to Markdale to be shipped. How is it that our enterprising village has not secured for itself the privilege of holding a monthly Cattle Fair. It is easy of access from all parts of the County, and no place enjoys better facilities for shipping. We hope this matter will be attended to at once, and measures taken to secure the establishment of such fairs at once.

WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT IT

One who has fairly tested Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, though prejudiced against proprietory medicines in general, writes—"I would not rest over night without this reliable remedy for sudden attacks of Cholic, Cramps and Cholera Morbus so prevalent in the summer season. I keep a bottle ready at hand."

The Bazaar and Concert held by the Ladies' Aid Association of the Presbyterian Church, Flesherton, on Fair Day, was a decided success. The greater portion of the fancy and useful articles at the Bazaar were disposed of, and a good dinner was served up for 15c each. We understand the Concert was well attended. The proceeds of the whole amounted to the handsome sum of $[illegible].

A SAFE REMEDY.

Many medicines check too suddenly attacks of Bowel Complaints, inducing dangerous inflammation, Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, cleanses, strengthens and heals the diseased and weakened mucuous surfaces of the Stomach and Bowels, and safely cures every form of Summer Complaints.

Now that the fall shows are past for this year, would it not be a good move to take steps towards purchasing a piece of land for a show ground The fair has perhaps reached its best until something is done in the above direction. We have no doubt that if there was a piece of land purchased, properly fenced and a hall built, that the extra receipts at the gate would in a few years pay for the whole. Would it not be wise to have a meeting called of members of the society and others interested for the purpose of considering the matter. Let us hear your views on the matter.

With the steady march of improvement in science and mechanics, medicine has kept even pace. It now gives us remedies in a perfection of form and composition that the crudities of earlier medical science never approached. Among the most effective of medicines are Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills—beautiful, sugar-coated, glistening globules—universally known and used as a reliable family physic. These pills possess great efficacy as a preventive of, or cure for the diseases incident to this section of the country; especially diseases of the stomach, liver and bowels, which often result in dangerous fever. They also give vigor to the circulation, remove constipation, create an appetite, and aid digestion, there by promoting health. Their ingredients are entirely vegetable, and they are a safe remedy in the hands of the most inexperienced.—Macon, Ga., Telegraph & Messenger.

WE are pleased to notice in a late issue of the Presbyterian the evidently great success which has attended the labors of a student of our acquaintance, Mr. W. H. W. Boyle, who has been engaged during the summer supplying the pulpit of an absent minister at London. Mr. Boyle, while pursuing honor courses in Toronto University in both mental and moral science and Oriental languages, has been in the pulpit almost every Sabbath during his vacations of the past three years. Under such heavy and continued stress his health seems to be excellent, and our young friend goes back to college in the course of a week, followed by the good wishes of the community at large, for his future usefulness in the noble work to which he has been called. We may add that on his departure from London he was surprised by deputation ... Bible classes, which he conducted during the summer, and presented with the handsome sum of $50, accompanied by two feeling addresses, expressive, says the above-named journal, of their appreciation of his deep zeal and earnestness in presenting the truths of God's word. —Com.

DUNDALK.

(From the Herald.)

SINCE our last issue of the Herald the weather has put on a fall appearance, and is giving a gentle warning to prepare for winter.

Our grain warehouses are overstocked, and our grain buyers are complaining for want of cars to ship their grain.

W. H. Peterson's new Woollen factory is in progress, under management of John Marshall.

Several of our villagers are complaining of light bread—we always like light bread, but make it a little heavier.

Our village school house requires some repairs before the winter sets in. We would like to se a porch put in front of each door, and some banking done as it would make the school more comfortable. Let our town fathers see to this at once.

We are surprised that a few of our farmers refuse to take the Herald, which gives all the latest news about their village. when we consider the fact that the Herald is the largest and cheapest local paper in the county, being only $1 to Jan. 1883.

ALEX. McCannell has just completed a very neat dwelling for Mrs. Stewart, on Owen Sound street.

There is an apple tree in the Township of Melanchton in full bloom. Last week ripe strawberries, this week apple blossoms—what county can beat this.

The Fruit Festival and popular Entertainment, under the auspices of the young Ladies of the Presbyterian Church, Dundalk, in aid of the Organ Fund, which was held on Friday evening in the Orange Hall, was a decided success, the Hall being filled, and all persons present seemed heartily to enjoy themselves. Great credit is due to Miss. L. Graham and Miss. C. Philips for their persevering exertion in getting up the entertainment and being the first in taken steps in having the debt on the Organ paid. The following is the Programme of the evening:—Duet, Mr and Mrs Ketchum; Reading, Mr. Deans; Solo, Miss C. Philips; Recitation, Mr Brown; Duet, Miss Rundle and Miss Philips; Reading Mr Deans; Duet, Miss Graham and Miss Rundle; Reading, J J Combie; Duet, Miss Philips and Mr W Rundle; Recitation, Mr Brown; Solo, Mrs Fechum; (Encore) Solo, Mrs Ketchum; Reading, Mr C Graham.

A FINANCIAL STORM FEARED.—"Storm signals are being hoisted in the city," says the Spectator, "with respect to America. The New York exchange still makes remittance profitable, and and the Bank of France, loaded with silver which it cannot sell, is unwilling to part with gold to anybody. The demand from America, the demand from France, and the demand from anxious bankers, therefore, fall upon the Bank of England. Altogether the rate of discount has been put up to five per cent. All stock exchange values are falling, and if anything gives way, or if the mad speculation in Paris is checked, there may be a bad quarter of an hour in the city, and money may be at eight per cent. before long. Trade is good and the revenue flourishing, but very good stock has been forced up to the extreme point at which investors will bid with money cheap, while in Paris people are buying shares especially bank shares, at prices as ridiculous as those of Mississippi stock. That cannot last, especially with the panic about Egypt hanging over the markets, and the French Government moving eighty thousand men in a serious campaign. We profess to know no secrets, but the signs of trouble increase."

FLESHERTON.

From a Correspondent.

I miss the Flesherton correspondence to the STANDARD the past two weeks; and as your own correspondent has become the chief of the scribes, I thought might be permitted to fill his place in the meantime.

The Richardson block adds very much to the appearance of the business portion of the village. It contains three shops two of, which are already occupied, one by Mr. Gorden, the other by Mr. Doll; the third when finished will be occupied by the Wm. Lucas Banking Co.

A well is required in the show grounds, that people can pump and drink Adam's ale if they like.

Mr. M. Aikitt, of Eugenia, is putting a 35 inch level wheel into his grist mill, and has overhauled the basement and built a new bulk head.

There are large quantities of potatoes going to the Station. Mr. Robertson has bought over three thousand bushels at 35cts, but to-day they went up another 5cts; one man sold $245.00 worth. Mr. Joseph Richardson, of Proton, dug near 1000 bushels off of 3½ acres.

Mr. Wm. Taylor has purchased a fine heavy draught team and is teaming grain for Mr. R. J. Sproule, who is said to be buying very largely this season.

We read of Burdock Bitters and Morey Bitters, but nothing keeps up the spirits like pouring a little Brandy down. We seen one old farmer take two finger lengths down and skip like a deer, an cuff another in double-quick time.

The station is not behind this week; it can boast of at least the most tremendous dog fight, two on one, and very systematic ejaculations from some of the men.

The steel rails are laid along the track to Flesherton Station. I expect that they will be spiked down before this comes to your readers.

To the Editor of the Herald.

SIR,—Having finished my harvest and commenced selling my grain, I drove to Dundalk with my first load last Saturday and found prices first class and everything satisfactory, so far as the market was concerned. But as I travelled side road 200, Township of Artemesia, I was led to ask myself, what is our council doing with our money that this road should be in such a shameful condition? I find in one place a complete trap for horses, (I expect this is where Nixon' horse was injured last winter). I also see the bridge near the gravel road is patched up with cedar rails thrown loosely on, instead of some sound timbers securely fastened, the guards are off the bridge and the whole structure is in a very shaky condition. Now, I would like to know if this road is allowed to remain in such a condition for the purpose of turning the people of this neighbourhood from their regular market, or through ignorance on the part of our council. In either case we are now satisfied that the only way the interests of this part of the township are to be protected is by a change at next election. Gentlemen, wake up and attend to your duty, and save yourselves trouble as well.

REMINISCENCES OF A TRIP FROM OWEN SOUND TO SAULT STE MARIE.

RYDAL BANK, Sept. 19th, 1881.

Twelve miles sailing to the west from Thessalon brings Bruce Mines, formerly a mining village of great importance, and I will give your readers what I know in regard to it. In the year 1864 Col. Banking explored the North Shore from French River to Sault Ste. Marie, at this place he found a promising vein of copper right near the shore. He began blasting, and in the fall of the next year he shipped the first load of copper in the steamer Cathcart. Shortly after it came in possession of the Bruce Land and Mining Company formed of capitalists in London, England, who showed great enterprise, and secured a tract of land four miles square They sunk shafts, built a lot of dwellings for men employed, and built a very large house. The engine was enormous. This engine is one of the best in America, it run machinery half a mile distant. Engineers will have an idea of its build, when the walking beam weighed thirty-five tons. The men employed was a village of themselves They built Schools, Churches, supported hotels, stores, and many good and evil insititutions. In a few years the company started the Wellington mines a quarter of a mile to the west, also along the shore. Here the same course of events followed. For a few years the company shipped the ore direct to Swansea in Wales, without any unloading on the way. Times were good. Common laborers got $25 a month and found. The Company cleared a fine farm to raise provender and the employees cleared small pieces on company's land for themselves. The soil is good without a stone with occassionally a rock knoll. Then the company determined to smelt the copper here, and to this purpose built a tremendous house at "Wellington mines." I cannot even faintly describe it. It cost a great sum. The chimney is one hundred and ninety feet high and twelve feet square at the base. The building of this house was one of the many events, which eventually stopped the works. Copper got down in price. One winter the miners were working by "tribute" or shares, and neglected to properly timber the tunnel. They had the whole winter's ore very near the opening. One Saturday after the men had got on surface, suddenly the shaft caved in, and enveloped the winter's work. When news of this reached England the company gave orders for suspension. The men left their tools in the place where they worked, the clerks left the half written sheets on the desks, the pens were never wiped to this day. One man was left in charge of the whole affair, but the fields have gone common. I cannot do better in describing the present looks of the place, than by quoting the words of the renown "Perrybingle." He calls it a grave yard of human hopes, and capital, and energy.

LOUIS N. THIBAUDEAU.

MARKDALE, Oct. 10th, 1881.

To the Editor.

SIR,—Mr. David Stinson, of Artemesia, has grew a pair of potatoes of which the daddy weighed 2 lbs. 10 oz., and the other, call it what you like, weighed two pounds and a half. This is a candid fact, for it takes thirteen to pick up after one digger, and before he started to dig them they were continually yelling at one another to lie over, but these two grew near the outer edge of the patch, so, therefore, they were not crowded so much and got a little better chance to grow.

A WRETCHED SCORE.

A score of years is a long time to look back upon, but when attended with continual suffering it seems almost a century; and all this pain could have been avoided if, when your liver commenced to trouble you, if you had taken Burdock Blood Bitters. Price $1.00, trial size 10 cents.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

AROUND THE WORLD.

Count Walburg, the Arctic explorer, who has just returned to Hammerfest from a journey to the lower Yenisei in a Bremen merchant steamer, is reported as declaring such navigation possible every year, despite the difficulties which have hitherto been held to surround it.

It is perhaps time to record some further facts concerning Boston's proposed World's Fair. A meeting of all the sub committees of the Committee of Twenty-eight was held last Thursday, and after a secret, and, it is said, animated conclave of two and a half hours, it was finally decided—to meet again in two weeks to consider the question whether the Fair shall or shall not be held.

The projected reorganization of the Spanish army will largely increase its numerical strength when it is fully mobilized. The infantry will comprise more than 310,000 trained men, while the other arms of the service will be able to muster at least 100,000 more. The total strength of the Spanish army will therefore amount to over 400,000 men; whereas, as at present organized, its war establishment, including colonial troops, barely exceeds 300,000 men.

Vaccination as practiced in China has two peculiar features. The subject is not operated on in the arm or leg, but in the nose, and the Government, while it does not compel people to submit to the operation, practically reaches the same end that it would by doing so by offering to parents for every child vaccinated a premium of 100 copper cash, which amounts to about ten cents, and, for a poor Chinaman in his own country, a sum not to be despised.

The Lick Observatory, which is in course of erection on Mount Hamilton, at San Jose, Cal., is expected to be completed in the coming month of October. The pier which is to sustain the great telescope is about finished. It is built of hard burnt brick and has a diameter of 13 feet 5 inches at the bottom, and tapering until it is eight feet across at the top: it is 24 feet high to the observing floor. Its foundation is solid, being laid in a bed of solid rock four feet and a half below the surface of the ground. It is held in its place in the excavation by a bed of cement.

The Boston Journal compares quotations from the market reports of September 29, 1880, with corresponding reports of the same date this year. The result ascertained is that wheat has advanced in price from $1.09 to $1.56 per bushel; mess pork from $16 to $20.50 per barrel; beans, (an important item in the Boston market) from $1 90 to $3 40 per bushel; apples from $1 25 to $3 50 per barrel; [illegible] butter, cheese, beef and sugar have advanced little, if any. The [illegible] impression one gets from the [illegible], however, is that the cost of [illegible] is now much greater than it was last year.

The statistics of the railway accidents in England for the year seem [illegible] as fixed a quantity as the number of letters which are posted without addresses. The total number killed [illegible] was 1,136 and the number [illegible] 3,958. Of these 113 persons died and 1,513 persons injured [illegible] passengers. The remainder [illegible] of the companies, and [illegible] 265 injured were trespassers and other persons. The number of persons who traveled [illegible] passengers last year, exclusive of season ticket holders was [illegible] 600,000,000, being an increase [illegible] over the number who [illegible] in the year before, showing [illegible] and a quarter million [illegible] who travel one is killed, and [illegible] one in every half million is [illegible].

[illegible] interesting statistics of mortality among railway travelers appear [illegible] journals. With commendable candor, France is given the first, and of course least enviable, place on the list, her railways killing annually one in every 2,000,000 passengers and wounding one in every half million. English railways kill one to every [illegible] 000,000, but surpass those of France [illegible] casualties, wounding one in every third of a million. Belgian [illegible] kill and wound one in every [illegible] and [illegible],000,000 respectively, while Prussia only one in every 21,500,000 and wounds one in every 4,000,000. Roundly speaking, French railways kill five times as many as English, English not quite twice as many as Belgian, and Belgian nearer three than twice as many as Prussian, which are much the least fatal of the four. The average rate of speed made [illegible] railways of these countries would form a valuable addition to [illegible] statistics.

FALL ASSIZES.

The Fall Assizes for this County at Owen Sound was to have commenced Monday the 26th ult., but owing to Hon. Justice Patterson having been detained at the Dufferin Assizes, the opening of the Court was delayed till Tuesday morning. The criminal calendar comprised seven cases, including three raising Dominion notes, one for robbery, one forgery, and one for assault. The civil docket comprised eight jury and four non-jury cases.—Mr. A. Frost conducted the Crown business. The following is a list of the Grand Jury:

Victor Lang, Foreman; James Fox, John Nasmith, D. McCormick, Thos. H. Reeve, George Richardson, Cornelius Duggan, James Struthers, John Keuning, Thomas Andrews, Samuel Stewart, Henry D. Irwin, Arch. Butters, Duncan Mathieson, Thos. Whitmore, John B. Graham, Jas. Stewart, Thos. Askin, Jas. Buchan, Thos. Hill, C. L. Grant, James Duff, Wm. Hogg, Samuel Dickson.

The following cases were disposed of:—

Whately vs. Lawrence—Action of ejectment. Settled between the parties.

Myles vs. Lawrence—This was an action for slander, arising out of the last municipal election in Euprasia.—Mr. Myles, Reeve, sued the defendant, Hugh Johnson, for damages for saying that he forged orders on the Treasurer. Verdict for defendant.

The Grand Jury brought in a True Bill against Silas Graham and Robert Yemen for Robbery.

Queen vs. Silas Graham and Robt. Yemen—The prisoners wer charged with having robbed Michael Ingram of a silver watch on the evening of Dominion Day. Ingram's story was that he and the prisoners were drinking together that day, and on his return for home in the evening they followed him up the hill, knocked him down, and took his watch. The watch was afterwards found at Jolley's Hotel where Mr. Jolley had purchased it from a stranger—not one of the prisoners. The defendants brought witnesses to prove an alibi. Verdict—Not Guilty.

The Grand Jury brought in a true bill against Andrew Farquharson for assault.

Pilkie vs. Boyce.—Undefended action for seduction. Verdict for plaintiff, $500.

WEDNESDAY.

Alexander vs. McDonald.—Action for seduction. Verdict for plaintiff, $500.

The Grand Jury brought in a true bill against Louisa Caroline Feathers for forgery.

Louisa Caroline Feathers on being arraigned, pleaded guilty. She had written letters on which to obtain money, as already referred to in our columns.—O. S. Times.

SUNDRY HUMBUGS.

"PATENT" CLAIMS.

That a vast deal of swindling was done through false claims for patents, is well known to those who keep the run of such matters. A farmer sees a device, one for a gate, for example, in the American Agriculturist, or other paper; it seems to be useful and easily made, and he constructs one. Some of his less wide-awake neighbors, after they have seen the gate throughly tested, take pattern from this, and in time there will be several such gates in the neighbourhood. After a while a chap comes along, claiming to hold a patent for the very device that makes the gate desirable, claims $5, or other sum as royalty, which must be paid at once, or a prosecution will follow. Such cases are accurring continually, not only with patents of gates, but with numerous other devices in use upon the farm or in the house. In such cases, where the claim of the patent is a fraudulent one, as it very often is, we advise resistance. But there are two sides to the question. While we do not regard our patent laws as perfect, they are as good as we are likely to have, and, good or bad, they are laws, and must be observed. The man who has taken out a patent has certain rights which the laws have, for a consideration, secured to him, and we would no more encourage an infringment upon a legitimate patent than we would favor the payment of fraudulent claims. But, it will be asked, what is one to do, if he is accused of infringing a patent? The first thing to do is to "take matters easy," and DON'T BE FRIGHTENED INTO DOING ANYTHING.

This is a country of laws, and if one has unintentionally infringed upon a patent, he will not be executed at the next cross roads without the benefit of clergy. Nor yet will he be thrown into a dungeon, and fed on bread and water. The holder of the patent must bring a suit, and in a United States Circuit Court at that. In the case where the claim is a just one, and a person's rights have been infringed, the holder of the patent will not be likely to indulge in threats, as he feels confident he is right, and the use of bluster and threatening of itself suggests fraud. Of course, every such case will have its peculiar features, and we can only give the general advice, to not be frightened, to do nothing in a hurry; consult the neighbors, as there are usually several such cases in the vicinity, to secure unity of action, and if convinced that the claim is a just one, make the best compromise possible. A correspondent at Carbon Center, Pa., sends us an account of a case in which claimants of a gate patent sued farmers for an infringement. The defendants, the farmers, were present in court with their witnesses, but the plaintiff did not appear at the trial, thus admitting that he had no cause. Every one claiming to hold a patent on an article should be willing to give its number, and the date on which it was issued. By writing to the Patent Office, at Washington, a copy of the patent can be procured for a moderate fee (50c., we think), and this will allow one to judge of the validity of the claim.....Some swindles, no matter how thoroughly exposed, have long lives. Here is the POWDER TO PREVENT LAMP EXPLOSIONS.

It is over 10 years ago that we showed up this powder, a pinch of which put into the lamp would not only prevent explosion of the oil, but insure against the breaking of the chimney. This wonderful stuff was nothing but common salt, colored blue with ultramarine, and, of course, utterly without effect in preventing explosions. We had not heard of this for several years, until a Spencerport paper came to hand with an account of the success of this swindle in one of the finest portions of New York State. Two well-dressed chaps not only sold the powder, but offered premiums of furniture and carpets to purchasers. At last accounts "they turned East at Ogden Center Church," driving at full speed, and we regret to say that the sheriff failed to come up with them,

A friend sends us a show-bill of which fairly shouts and screeches for persons to act as agents for it, and asks our opinion as to his taking the agency. We have read over the sheet carefully, and advise him, unless he wishes to become acessory to manslaughter, to let it alone. Though it is not so stated in plain terms, this burner is to be used with Naphtha, Benzine, or similar light petroleum products, something "that will cost one half less than kerosene." It claims over and over to give a "gas light," which is simply untrue. It is a contrivance for burning the vapor of one of the liquids mentioned. A gas is permanent of ordinary temperatures, the vapor produced by the heat of the burner is no more a gas than is steam. That a bright light may be produced is very likely, but there is always great danger when any of the liquids of the benzine class are in use. The sale of gunpowder is regulated by law, and so is the sale of poisons in most States, but these dangerous liquids, more daugerous than gun powder, because so little is known of their real nature, may be sold freely in every country store. No device of burner, no form of lamp, can make it safe to have these liquids in use in the house.—American Agriculturist for Sept.

BOGUS CERTIFICATES.—It is no viled drugged stuff, pretending to be made of wonderful foreign roots, barks, &c., and puffed up by long bogus certificates pretended miracuous cures, but a simple, pure, effective medicine, made of well known valuable remedies, that furnishes its own certificates by its cures. We refer to Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines.—Republican.

ROBT. ASKIN,

IMAGINARY EVILS.

Let to-morrow take care of to-morrow;
Leave things of the future to fate,
What's the use to anticipate sorrow!
Life's troubles comes never to late!
If to hope over much be an error,
'Tis one that the wise have preferred;
And how often have hearts beat in terror
Of evils that never occurred.

Have faith—and thy faith will sustain thee—
Permit not suspicion and care
With invisible bonds to embrace thee,
But bear what God gives thee to bear.
Thy spirit supported and gladdened
Be ne'er by "forbodings" deterred!
But think how oft hearts have been saddened
By fear—of what never occurred.

Let to-morrow take care of to-morrow;
Short and dark as our life may appear,
We make it still shorter and sorrow[ful]
Still shorter by folly and fear;
Half our troubles are half our invention,
And often from blessings conferred
Have we shrunk in wild apprehension
Of evils—that never occurred.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

—:o:—

CHAPTER III. Continued.

'Which our spirited heiress never will be. I agree with you, Mr. Dangerfield; and yet you told me you were in love with her, and wanted to marry her.'

'So I did.'

'Or her fortune which?'

'I don't see that that's any business of yours, Mrs. Vavasor; I don't see what I am standing here abusing Katherine to you for. You don't like her, do you? Now what has she ever done to you?'

'Nothing whatever—I haven't seen Katherine until to night for fifteen years. She was two years old then—a little demoiselle in pantalettes, and too young to have an enemy.'

'Yet you are her enemy, Mrs. Vavasor, and you sit at her table and eat her bread and her salt. And you speak of her mother as if you detested her. Is it for the mother's sake you hate the daughter?'

'For the mother's sake.' She repeated the four short words with a concentrated bitterness that rather repelled her companion. 'And you hate her for her own, Mr. Dangerfield.' She laid her little hand suddenly and sharply on his arm, and sent the words in his ear in a sibilant whisper, 'We both hate her; let us make common cause together, and have our revenge.'

Peter Dangerfield threw off the gloved hand that felt unpleasantly like a steel manacle on his wrist.

'Don't be melodramatic, if you please, Mrs. Vavasor. Revenge indeed. And I a lawyer. You would make an uncommonly good first class actress, my dear madam, but in private life your histrionic talents are quite thrown away. Revenge! bah! Why the vendetta has gone out of fashion even in Corsica. We don't live in the days of the handsome Lucretia, when a perfumed rose or a pair of Jouvin's best kids sent one's adversary to glory There is no such word as revenge in these latter days, my dear madame. If one's wife runs away from one with some other fellow, we don't follow and wipe out our dishonour in his blood; we simply go to Sir. Creswell and get a divource. If we run away with some other fellow's wife, that other fellow sues us for damages, and makes a good thing of it. Believe me Mrs. Vavasor, revenge is a word that soon will be obsolete, except on theatrical boards. But at the same time I should like to know what you mean.'

'What is that you sing me there?' Mrs. Vavasor cried, in the French idiom she used when excited. 'While the world lasts, and men love, and hate, and uses words and pistols, revenge will never go out of fashion. And you hate your cousin—hate her so that if looks were lightning she would have fallen at your feet ten minuter age. 'A little ricketty dwarf.' She laughed her shrill, womewhat elfish laugh. 'Not a pleasant name to be called, Mr. Dangerfield.'

His face blackened at the remembarance, his small, eyes shot forth that steely fire light blue eyes only can flash.

'Why do you remind me of that?' he said hoarsely. 'She did not mean it—she said so.'

'She said so—she said so!' his companion cried scornfully. 'Peter Dangerfield, you're not the man I take you for if you endure, quietly endure such an insult as that. And look at her now, with Gaston Dantree, that penniless teunor-singer, with the voice of an angel and the face of a god. Look how she smiles up at him. Did she ever give you such a glance as that? See how he bends over her and whispers in her ear. Did she ever listen to you with that happy face, those drooping downcast eyes? Why, she loves that man—that improverished adventurer; and love and happiness make her almost beautiful. And she called you 'a rickety dwarf.' Perhaps even now they are laughing over it rather as a good joke.'

'Woman! Devil!' the victim burst out, goaded to frenzy. 'You lie! Katherine Dangerfield would stoop to no such baseness as that!'

'Would she not? You have yet to learn to what depths of baseness woman like her can stoop. She has bad, bitter bad blood in her veins, I tell you. She comes of a daring and unscrupulous race. Oh, don't look at me like that—I don't mean the Dangerfields. And you will bear her merciless aunt, and stand quietly by while she marries younder handsome coxcomb and go and be best man at the wedding, and take your hat off for ever after when you meet Gaston Dantree, Lord of Scarswood Park. Bah! Peter Dangerfield, you must have milk and water in your veins instead of blood, and I am only waiting my time here talking to you. I'll detain you no longer. I wish you good-evening.'

She had goaded him to the right point at last. As she turned to go he [illegible] back.

'Stay!' he cried hoarsely; 'you shall not go! You do well to say I hate her. And she shall never marry Gaston Dantree if I can prevent it. Only show me the way how! Only show me!' he exclaimed, breathless and hoarse, 'and see whether I have blood in my veins instead of milk and water—a man's passions in my heart—though it be the heart of a ricketty dwarf.'

Ah! that blow struck home.

'Look at them once again, Mr. Dangerfield, lest your brave resolutions should cool—look at Katherine Dangerfield and her lover now.'

The baronet's daughter was waltzing again—she had a passionate love of dancing, and floated with the native grace of a Bayadère.

She was waltzing with Dantree, her long rose wreathed crowned hair floating over her shoulder, her happy face uplifted as she whirled down the long vista in his arms to the intoxicating music of the 'Guards' Waltz.

'You see!' Mrs. Vavasor said, significantly; 'he who runs may read, and he who stands still may understand. His melancholy tenor voice, his lover-like sighs, his dark, pathetic eyes have done their work—Katherine Dangerfield is in love with Gaston Dantree! It is a very old story: a lady of high degree has 'stooped to conquer.' Sir John won't like it, I dare say; but could Sir John refuse his idolized daughter anything? If she cried for the moon she would have it. And she is so impetuous, dear child! She will be Mrs. Gaston Dantree in the time it would take another young lady to decide the colour of the bridesmaids' dresses.'

'She shall never be Mrs. Gaston Dantree if I can prevent it. You don't suppose, now,' Mrs. Vavasor said, thoughtfully, 'this Mr. Dantree is in love with her?'

'I know nothing about it. He looks as though he were, at least—and be hanged to him,'

'That tells nothing. She is the heiress of Scarswood, and Dantree—like yourself, I haven't a doubt—is in love with that. I wonder if either of you would want to marry her if she hadn't a farthing—if her brown hair and her fine figure were her only fortune?'

'I can answer for myself—I would see her at the duce first!'

'And unless I greatly mistaken him Mr. Dantree would also. How she looks up at him! how she smiles!—her infatuation is patent to the whole room. And after her, you are the heir-at-law, Mr. Dangerfield.'

'I don't see what that's got to do with it,' the young man retorted, sulkily. 'I am likely to remain heir-at-law for the remainder of my days, for what I see. The governor will go off his hooks and she will marry, and there will be a son—half a dozen of 'emmost likely—and my cake is dough I wish you wouldn't talk about it at all; it's of no use, a man howling his life out for what he never can get.'

'Certainly not—for what he can't get; but I don't precieve the 'can't get' in this case. Three people stood between Colonel Dangerfield and the title six months ago, and they—as you express it in the elegantly allegorical language of the day—'went off the hooks;' and lo! our Indian officer all in a moment, steps into three pair of dead men's shoes, a title and a fortune. Scarswood may change hands unexpectedly before the year ends again.'

'Mrs. Vavasor—if that be your game—I don't understand you. What's the use of badgering a man in this way? If you've got anything to say, say it. I never was any hand at guessing riddles. What the duce do you mean?'

Mrs. Vavasor laughed gaily.

'Forcible, but not polite. Did you ever have your fortune told, Mr. Dangerfield? I have some gypsy blood in my veins. Give me your hand, and I'll tell it, with the proverbial piece of silver.'

'He held it out mechanically. Under all this riddle-rike talk he knew some strong meaning, very much to the point, lay. What could she mean? Who could she be? She took his thin, pale, cold hand, and peered into the palm, with the prettiest fortunetelling air imaginable.

'A strangely chequered palm, my gentleman; all its strange future to come. I see a past, quiet and uneventful. I see a character, thoroughly selfish, avaricious, and unprincipled. No, don't take your hand away, Mr. Dangerfield. You can hate with tigerish intensity; you would commit any crime under Heaven for money, so that you were never likely to be found out. You care for nobody but yourself, and you never will. A woman stands in your path to fortune—a woman you hate. That obstacle will be removed. I see here a ruined home and over ruin and death you step into fortune. Don't ask me how. The lines don't tell that just yet; they may very soon. You are to be a baronet, and the time is very near, How do you like your fortune, Sir. Peter Dangerfield, that is to be?'

She dropped his hand and looked him full in the face, streaming fire in her bright black eyes.

'Hush-h-h! for Heaven's sake!' he whispered, in terror. 'If you should be over heard?'

'But how do you like it?'

'There can be no question about that, Only I don't understand. You are mocking me. What you perdict can never happen.'

'Why not?'

'Why not! why not!' he exclaimed, impatiently. 'You don't need to ask that question. Katherine Dangerfield stands between me; a life as good—better than my own.'

The little temptress in amber silk laid her canary-coloured glove on his wrist and drew him close to her.

'What I predict will happen, as surely as we stand here. Don't ask me how; I can't tell you to-night. There's a secret in Sir John Dangerfield's life—a secret I have been paid well to keep, which I have kept for fifteen years, which no money will make me keep much longer. I have debt of vengeance, contracted before Katherine Dangerfield was born, which Katherine Dangerfield yet must pay. What will you give me if within the next three months I make you heir of Scarswood?'

'You?'

'I.'

'It is impossible!'

'It is not!' She stamped her foot. 'Quick! Tell me! What will you give me?'

'I don't understand you.'

'I don't mean that you shall yet. Will you give ten thousand pounds the day that makes you—through me, mind—lord of Scarswood? Quick! Here come our lovers. Yes or no?'

'Yes.'

'It is well. I shall have your bond instead of your promise soon. Not a whisper of this to a living mortal, or all is at an end. We are sworn allies, then, from this night forth. Shake hands upon it.'

They clasped hands.

He shivered a little, unprincipled though he was, as he felt the cold, steely clasp of her gloved fingers. She glanced up, a flash of triumph lighting her eyes, to where Katherine Dangerfield, still leaning on her handsome lover's arm, approached.

'Now, then, my baronet's daughter—my haughty little heiress—look to yourself. I am a woman who never yet spared friend or foe who stood in my path. Væ Victis.'

She vanished as she spoke; and Peter Dangerfield, feeling like a man in a dream, his head in a whirl, glided after her, as his cousin and her cavalier stepped under the arch of rose and myrtle.

CHAPTER IV.

LOVE UNDER THE LAMPS.

'How charmingly cool it is here,' Miss Dangerfield's fresh young voice is saying, as they come in; 'how bewitching is this pale moon-shiny sort of lamplight among the orange trees and myrtles; and, oh! Mr. Dantree, how delicious that last waltz was. You have my step as nobody else has it, and you walz so light—so light! It has been a heavenly evening together.'

She threw herself into a rustic chair as she spoke, where trailing vines and crimson bloom formed a brilliant arch over head, and looked up at him with eyes that shone like stars.

'I wonder if it is only because balls and parties are such rare things to me that I have enjoyed this so greatly, or because I am just seventeen, and everything is delightful at seventeen; or because—because—Mr. Dantree, I wonder if you have enjoyed yourself?'

'I have been in Paradise, Miss Dangerfield.'

'And how gloomily he says it—and [illegible] laughieed Katherine. 'Your paradise can't be any great things judging by your face at this moment.'

'Miss Dangerfield, it is because my paradise has been so perilously sweet that I look gloomy. The world outside, bleak and barren, must have looked trebly black to Eve when she left Eden.'

'Eve shouldn't have left it then—she should have had sense and left the tempting apple alone.'

'Ah, but it was so tempting, and it hung so deliciously within reach. And Eve forgot, as I have done, everything, the fatal penalty—all but the heavenly sweetness of the passing moment.'

'Well,' Miss Dangerfield said, fluttering her fan, and looking upward, 'I may be stupid, Mr. Dantree, but I don't quite catch your metaphor. Eve ate that apple several thousand years ago, and was very properly punished, but what has that to do with you?'

'Because I, like Eve, have eaten my apple to-night, and to-morrow the gates of my earthly paradise close upon me for ever.'

Divested of its adjuncts, there wasn't much, perhaps, in this speech; but given a young lady of seventeen, of a poetical and sentimental turn of mind—soft, sweet music swelling in the distance—a dim light—the fragrance of tropic flowers and warmth and a remarkably good looking young man—it implies a great deal. He certainly looked dangerously handsome at this moment, with his pale Byronic face, fathomless dark eyes, his whole air of impassioned melancholy—a beauty as fatal as the serpent to Eve in his own allegory.

No doubt that serpent came to our frail first mother in a very beautiful guise else she had never listened to his seductive words.

The soft white lace, the cluster of blush-roses on Katherine's breast, rose and fell. She was only seventeen, and over head and ears in love, poor child.

She laughed at his romantic words, but there was a little tremor in her clear tones as she spoke:—

'Such a sentimental speech, Mr. Dantree. Sussex is a very nice county, and Scarswood a very agreeable place, no doubt; but neither quite constitute my idea of paradise. And what do you mean by saying you leave to-morrow?'

'I mean I dare stay no longer. I should never have come here at all—I wish to Heaven I never had.'

It was drawing near. Her heart was throbbing with rapture; she loved him, and she knew what was coming, but still she parried her own delight.

'Please don't be profane, Mr. Dantree. You wish you had never come? Now, I call that anything but complimentary to the neighbourhood and to me. Be kind enough to explain yourself, sir. Why do you wish you had never come?'

'Because I have been mad—because I am mad. Oh, Katherine! can't you see? Why will you make me speak what I should die rather than utter? Why will you make me confess my madness—confess that I love you?'

He made an impassioned gesture, and turned away. Macready could not have done it better. His voice, his glance, his passionate words, were the perfection of first class drama. And then there was dead silence.

'You do not speak!' he cried 'I [illegible]

[illegible] He was really getting alarmed, in spite of his conviction that she was hopelessly in love with him. 'Well, I deserve it all! I stand before you penniless, with neither noble name nor fortune to offer you, and I dare to tell you of my hopeless passion. Katherine, forgive me!'

The rich green carpet was soft, there was no one to see, and he sank gracefully on one knee before her, and bowed his head over her hand.

'Forgive me if you can, and tell me to go.'

Then his soft tanor tones died away pianissimo in stifled emotion, and he lifted her hand to his mustached lips. It trembled—with an ecstacy to great for words. He loved her like this—her matchless darling—and he told her to bid him go. He fingers closed over his, tighter and tighter—she bent down until he could almost hear the loud throbbing of her heart.

'Go!' she whispered, faintly. 'Gaston, I should die if you left me.'

He clasped both her hands with a wild, theatrical start and gazed at her in incredulous amaze.

'Katherine! do you know what you say? Have I heard you aright? For pity's sake, do not mock me in my desperation—do not lift me for a moment to Heaven only to cast me out again. It cannot be—it is maddest presumption of me to hope that you love me!'

Her hand closed only the more closely over his; her head drooped, her soft, abundant brown hair hiding it tremor of bliss.

'I never hoped for this,' he said; 'I never thought of this! I know it was my destiny—my madness—to adore you; but never—no, never in my wildest dream—did I dare hope you could stoop to me. My darling—say it just once, that I may know I am awake.' He was very wide awake, indeed, at that moment. 'Say just once, my own heart's darling, "Gaston, I love you!"'

She said it, her face hidden in his superfine coat-facings, her voice trembling, every vein in her body thrilling with rapture.

And Mr. Gaston Dantree smiled—a half-amused, a half-exultant smile of triumph.

'I've played for high stakes before,' he thought, 'but never so high as this, or with half so easy a victory. And—oh, powers of vengeance!—if Marie should ever find this out. There's only one drawback now, the old man. There'll be no end of a row when this comes out.'

She lifted her head from his shoulder and looked at him, shy and sweet.

'And you really care for me like this, Gaston, and you really thought I would let you go—you really thought the difference in wealth and rank between us would be any difference to me? How little you know me.'

'I knew you for the best, the dearest, the loveliest of all women. But your father, Katherine—he will never consent to a poor artist like me coming and wooing his darling.'

'You don't know him, Gaston; papa would do anything on earth to please me—anything. When he discovers how we love each other he will not stand between us. He lives but to make me happy.'

You are sure of this, Katherine?'

'Certainly, Gaston; your poverty will be no obstacle to him.'

'Then he's a greater fool than I take him for,' thought Mr. Dantree. 'If I were in his place, I would kick Mr. Gaston Dantree out of the room. Good Heaven! if I should marry this girl and it should get to Marie's ears! If—I shall marry her, come what may. Eight thousand at stake, and Marie the only obstacle in the way, and hundreds of leagues of sea and land between me and that obstacle. There is no turning back now; come what may, I shall marry the heiress of Scarswood.' He turned to her with almost real passion in his voice now.

'Katherine, he said, taking both her hands in his and looking her eyes, 'whatever betides, for good or for ill, you will not draw back—for good or for evil you are mine?'

She met his eyes full for the first time. She was pale, but there was no tremor in her voice as she slowly repeated his words. Clearly and firmly they came:—

'Yours, Gaston—yours only. For good or for evil, to the end of my life—yours!'

For good or for evil!—ominous words.

For good or for evil the vow was plighted; and she stood under the lamps pledged to become Gaston Dantree's wife.

CHAPTER V.

BEFORE BREAKFAST.

In the bleak, raw dawn of the wet October morning Sir John Dangerfield's guest went home. When the lamp still gleamed among the flowers on the landing and stairsways, Mrs. Vavasor, trailing the yellow glimmer of her silk robe behind her, went up to her own room—went up with the fag end of a tune between her lips, a feverish lusre in her eyes, a feverish flush, not all rouge, in her cheeks, looking, as a hopeless adorer at the foot of the stairs quoted:

"In her lovely silken murmur,
Like an angel clad with wings."

The adorer had taken a great deal of champagne at supper, and hiccoughs interrupted the poetic flow of the quotation.

So also had Mrs. Vavasor herself. Perhaps a little of the brilliancy of eyes and colour were due to the Cliquot, but then a good deal more was owing to triumph. Everything was going on so well. The little debt she had waited so long to pay off was in a fair way to receive a full receipt.

Peter Dangerfield was pliant as wax in her hands. Gaston Dantree was the man of all men whom she would have chosen for Katherine Dangerfield's affianced husband. And Sir John had passed the night in a sort of earthly purgatory.

'Poor old Sir John!' the little woman said, airily, to herself; 'I'm really concerned for him. He never did me any harm—poor old soldier. How plainly he showed his abhorrence of me in his face, [illegible] old man.—[illegible] I suppose [illegible] in her [illegible] darling [illegible] could not fail to see it. I suppose [illegible] handsome tenor proposed in the conservatory. What a [illegible] it would be to let him marry her after all, and then speak out. I think I'll wait until the wedding day. Ah, my lady!—my lady! You were a great peeress and a brilliant woman in your day, but you're dead now, and forgotten, and little Harriet, whom you circumvented so cleverly, lives still, and prospers, and hates you dead as she hated you alive.'

The fire still burned on the marble hearth, the waxlights glimmered softly. She drew the window curtain and looked out at the rainy morning light struggling feebly in the stormy grey sky. The elms and beeches rocked in the October gale, the swaying of the giant trees was like the dull roar of the sea. She dropped the silken curtain with a shiver and turned away.

'It gives me the horrors,' she muttered; 'it makes me think of old age, and death, and the grave. Will I live to become old, I wonder? and will I have money enough left to pay hirelings to smooth the last journey? This visit to Sussex will surely make my fortune as well as give me my revenge. And when—all is over—I will go back to Paris—oh, my beautiful Paris! and live the rest of my life there. Whether that life be long or short, I shall at least have enjoyed every hour of it. And, my lady, I'll be even with you to the last, and carry my secret to the grave.'

She crossed over to the wardrobe where they had placed her trunks, opened one, and took out a book of cigarette paper and an embroidered tobacco-case.

'It's no use going to bed,' she thought: 'I can never sleep at these abnormal hours. A cigarette will soothe my nerves better than slumber.'

She began, with deft fingers, to roll half-a-dozen cigarettes, and then lying back in a luxurious arm-chair, with two slender arched feet upon the fender, to light and smoke. One after another she smoked them to the very last ash. The rainy daylight filled the room as she flung the end of the last inch into the fire.

She arose with a yawn, extinguished the lights, drew the curtains and let in the full light of the gray, wet morning. The great trees rocked wearily in the high gale, a low leaden sky lay over the wet downs, and miles away the sea melted drearily into the horizon. In the pale bleak light brilliant little Mrs. Vavasor looked worn and haggard, and ten years older than last night.

[TO BE CONTINUED]

"DON'T KNOW HALF THEIR VALUE.—They cured me of Ague, Billiousness and Kidney Complaint, as recommend. I had a half bottle left which I used for my two little girls, who the Doctors and neighbours said could not be cured. I would have lost both of them one night if I had not given them Hop Bitters. They did them so much good I continued their use until they were cured. That is why I say you do not know half the value of Hop Bitters, and do not recommend them high enough."—B., Rochester, N. Y.—American Rural Home.

SHALL WOMEN SMOKE.

Oddly enough [illegible] how improper a cigarette is supposed to be when a women smokes it, the men who like fast woman are not the ones who like lady smokers. These who do are the artists, the authors, the men of mind, who are not fascinated by almond-shaped eyes, a small waist and an absense of virtue, but who like a woman who can understand them, and who has conversational powers of her own. They obtain from an intelligent woman a delicate and charming appreciation; they often discover in her wonderful suggestiveness. Society does not give men and women much opportunity for any real interchange of ideas, and the men who like a clever woman are often delighted when they find out that she smokes. It is remarkable how a little tobacco puffing will break down the mental barrier between the sexes. It is an excuse for the physical repose which is the best condition for taking; it brightens the mind an quickens the ideas; it fills up all the pauses when no one has anything to say. You have your smoke rings to watch instead of gazing at your neighbor's face. Indeed, there are so many charms about it that there is small wnoder that clever men and women are fond of this little magic symbol of companionship, the cigarette.

In all probability the higher education of women will bring about one result which its advocates have never thought of. Girl graduates, overworked and crammed, will take to the solace of smoking. The women who are pushing their way into the professions will discover their need of it. When women begin to work they will smoke also. Gradually the cigarette will be entirely associated with the blue stocking instead of the Adonyma and her imitators. It will be useless to protest or condemn. The use of tobacco was prohibited in Russia—the knout threatened for the first offense, death for the second—yet Russian ladies are the greatest of smokers. Pope Urban VIII. issued a bull against it; our King James fought vigorously against its introduction here. In the East the priests and sultans declared smoking to be a sin against their holy religion, and yet the Turk is seldom seen without a pipe. Even the edict of society will not alarm the new generation of clever women. The actress smokes in her dressing room because she is exhausted; the authors, (and we have one or two women who can paint) will smoke in their studies for the same reason. When sensible men go to see them they will light up together and have a sociable talk. Let us console ourselves with the fact that a pretty woman who smokes because she likes it looks well, doubtless there will come a day when Worth will add to his dresses a dainty little tobacco pouch or cigarette pocket. And we may be sure when fashion has once got a word to say in its favor smoking will no longer be improper.—London World.

"THE LEAVES SHALL BE FOR THE HEALING OF THE NATIONS."

The leaf of the Wild Strawberry has verified that Scriptural quotation. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the marvel of healing in all varieties of Summer Complaints, and Fluxey, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum and every form of Bowel Complaints of children or adults, promptly yields to its power of healing.

T. G. & B. RAILWAY.

The Steel rails are now laid to Markdale; barbed wire fences have been put up through the swamps and other places, where needed. The old wooden bridges are being replaced by stone and iron, the road has been straightend at the Humber and a splendid bridge has been erected over the river, the Station houses along the line are being repainted; and snow fences are in the course of construction wherever it is desined necessary to place them. The promises made some time since are being fully carried out, and there is every indication that by the 12th of November, when it is expected the gauge will be changed to the Standard of 4 feet 8½ inches, we will have one of the best roads in the Dominion. By the 14th everything will be in smooth running order, and the new powerful locomotives and other rolling stock, which has been constructed for the contemplated alteration of guage will be placed on the road.

AMERICAN ENTERPRISE.

No invention of the nineteenth century has worked a greater revolution in household economy or conferred more of a benifit on humanity than the sewing machine.

The first productions were crude and uncouth in the extreme, and it was reserved for American skill and ingenuity to bring forth a machine of any practical value.

In order to appreciate the great advancement which has taken place it is only necessary to compare one of the machines built during the infancy of the invention with one of the latest improved "Light Running New Home," the rapidly increasing popularity of which is the envy of all its competitors.

In the manufacture of this machine old ideas have been discarded, and in accordance with the progressive movement of the age new mechanical principles hav been substituted of such inherent and absolute value as cannot fail to commend themselves to the most casual observer.

For all kinds of domestic and manufacturing work the New Home is unequaled.

All the really good points contained in other machines have been untilized in its construction.

Many new improvements and devices have also been added, the result of which is a machine as nearly perfect as it is possible to make one.

For simplicity, durability, ease of management, and capacity for work, the "Light Running New Home" has no rival, and the happy possessor of one may rest assured that he or she has the very best the world affords.

All who send for the Company's new illustrated catalogue, and enclose their advertisement (printed on another page), will receive a set of advertising novelties of value to card collectors.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor.

DEAR SIR,—In two of the recent issues of your paper, I took particular notice to Mr. Ward's attempt to refute Mr. Brown's claim to true apostolicity for the Presbyterian form of Church government.

In his first letters he asked Mr. B. to "account for the unusual predominance of Church government by Bishops, Priests, and Deacons during the first fifteen centuries of the Christain era."

Now, I deny the above assertion with regard the universality of Episcopacy during the whole of the period above stated. And I am prepared to prove from Scripture and history that during the first two centuries, at least, the government of the Church was Presbyterian.

The great outlines of Apostolic polity may be discovered in the Church of Jerusalem. We learn from the book of the Acts (Acts i, 4; viii, 1) that the Apostles remained a considerable time in the Holy City after the resurrection of our Lord; and it is plain that they stood meanwhile on a footing of perfect equality. They had already been rebuked for striving for who among them should be the greatest; (Luke 4, xxii) they had been told that one was their master even Christ; (Matt. xxiii, 10-12) and they had been taught to treat each other as brethren. If, according to a tradition resting apparently on a sound foundation, (Clem. Strom, 6, p. 742) they sojourned twelve years in Jerusalem after the effusion of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, they must, all this time, as a common council, have ruled the Mother Church of Christendom. The community over which they presided consisted of many thousands of souls (Acts ii, 41; iv, 4); it must have formed several worshipping societies; and yet it presents no trace of Episcopacy. The Apostles—a united body incorporated by divine authority—constituted the primitive presbytery of Jerusalem. Their office, as described by themselves, and so far as the holy city was concerned, involved merely the performance of the ordinary duties of the pastorate; for they were to give themselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word (Acts iv, 4). They were assisted by a body of deacons whose business it was to relieve them from secular anxieties by taking charge of the distribution of alms—the only monetary care with which the infant Church was encumbered.

The Apostles acted together then in the government of the Church of Jerusalem. They admitted converts to their society by baptism; they had one faith, known as the "Apostles' doctrine"; and they belonged to one brotherhood known as the "Apostles' fellowship" (Acts ii, 42). They united in the ordination of deacons, (Acts vi, 6) and did not appoint a Bishop to do so; and when they heard that the people of Samaria had also received the word of God, "they sent unto them Peter and John" (Acts viii, 14). Thus they were subject to one another, and in the administration of internal discipline as well as in the management of missions they ruled the Church conjointly. When about to leave Jerusalem they established there a body of elders to occupy their place and perform their functions (Acts xi, 30). These elders were recognized as members of their common council; and even when the question of the circumcision of the Gentiles was discussed "the Apostles and elders came together" for its consideration—they had a meeting of Presbyters (Acts xv, 6).

The other Christian fraternities throughout the Roman Empire had the same organization as the parent society. The Church of Antioch—perhaps only second to that of Jerusalem in numbers and influence—was under the care of "prophets and teachers" (Acts xiii, 1), who co-operated in its supervision. They were banded together in their ministry; and when Barnabas and Paul were to be set apart to the work of the missions, these prophets and teachers were associated in the act of ordination (Acts xiii, 3).

The Church of Ephesus—another of the most famous of the early Christian societies—was fashioned after the same model. It had its Bishops or Elders and its deacons—all chosen by popular election (1 Tim. i, 3; iii, 1-2; iii, 10; Acts xx, 17-28). Its Elders were required "to take heed to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost had made them bishops," and to guard particularly against the intrusions of false teachers (Acts xx, 28). Some of them only ruled, whilst others laboured in word and doctrine (1 Tim. v, 17). These elders were the only governors of the Church in Ephesus; and Paul in his farewell address to them ignores the existence of any ecclesiastical superior. He assumes that they possessed the power of self government, and that they were officially responsible for each other's proceedings.

Throughout the whole of the Apostolic age the churches remained under the same form of polity. The first Epistle of Peter was written at an advanced period of the reign of Nero; and the brethren scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, to whom it was sent, were their associates under presbyterial government. The Apostle then speaks to his fellow rulers as one of themselves—not in the language of command, but in the humblest tones of exhortation. "The elders which are among you," says he, "I exhort, who am also an elder, * * * * feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint but willingly, not for filthy lucre but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being en samples tot he flock (1 Peter v, 1 3).

And besides the above proofs from the writings of the Apostles, we learn from a letter written about A.D. 96, in the name of the Church of Rome to the Church of Corinth, that the same ecclesiastical regimen was then the order of the West. The Epistle rebukes the Corinthians for their quarrels, and exhorts them to submit to the rules of their presbyters or elders; but it never even hints that they were amenable to any authority. We infer from this ancient memorial that presbyterial government existed as well in Rome as in Corinth (Clement of Rome epistle 1st).

Again the Epistle of Polycarp to the Philippians, written about the middle of the second century bears testimony to the continuance of the same polity; for at that, the Churches of Smyrna and Philippi were unquestionably by their presbyteries.

The space at my disposal will only permit me simply to mention some of the many other early writers, who bear testimony to the universal predominance of presbyterial government of the Christian era.

See—Hieronymus epistle 82, (al. 83, 1); Augustine, epistle 82, ad Heiron, c. 33; Chrysostomi Hom. 1st. in epistle ad Philipp; Theodoret comm. in Philippi 1st and 1st, &c., &c.

Mr. Ward's first letter can not be answered unless some reason is assigned for the almost universal prevalence of episcopacy from the close of the second to the beginning of the fifteenth century.

The origin of it is thus narrated by one of the most erudite of the ancient Fathers: "Before that, by the prompting of the devil, there were parties in religion * * * * * the Churches were governed by the common council of the presbyters. But after that each one began to reckon those whom he baptized as belonging to himself and not to Christ it was decreed throughout the wholeworld that one elected from the presbyters should be set over the rest * * * * * that the seeds of schisms might be destroyed" (Jerome, comment in Titum). This, of course, has particular reference to the Hierarchy, which owed its establishment to the principle of the new polity, when carried out to its legitimate consequences; for if it was necessary to set up a bishop to prevent a schism among the presbyters, it was [illegible] tionary to serve as a bond of union among the bishops.

The establishment of Episcopacy was due, not only to the desire of securing greater unity, and thus preventing schisms, but also to the princes of the Gentiles exercising lordship over God's heritage. No sooner had the men of ability and influence in connection with the Roman Empire, acquired prominent positions in the church, than they employed her for political ends, and moulded her government to suit their own tyrannica designs (see Cyprian, epistle 55, ed Baluz).

Episcopacy was always an auxiliary to tyrannical kings and princes. The Church of England would now be Presbyterian had it not been for the princes of the gentiles exercising lordship over God's heritage. "King James the First said at Hampton Court Conference, "ye are aiming at a Scot's Presbytery, which agrees with monarchy and well as God and the devil." By monarchy James doubtless meant his own will which was tyranny * * * * * 'The doctrine—that is the doctrine of the Presbyterians—said Charles I, 'is anti-monarchical. I will say,' he continued, 'that there was not a wiser man since Solomon than he who said 'no bishop, no King.' It was doubtless a wise saying.

The first principle of Presbyterianism is the rights of the people. In whom does church power rest, in the people, or in the clergy? When this question is settled we decide the civil liberty of the nation. If we decide that the power rests in the clergy, then we establish a principle which by an inevitable analogy associates itself with the principle that the civil power rests in Kings and nobles."

It is very strange that any man of intelligence would say that "every person who knows anything of Church history knows that the Presbyterian form of Church government was unknown to the world until the sixteenth century."

Now, does Dean Stanley know anything of Church history? Read his address to the Student of St. Andrew's University, and see what he says about Presbyterianism. Does Lightfoot know anything of Church history? Read his works, 3, 2 4 2 and 9 179. And we find that be bears testimony to the Apostolicity of Presbyterianism.

Your's truly,
JOHN CHISHOLM.

OSPREY SHOW.

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL SHOW EVER HELD IN THE TOWNSHIP.

On Tuesday Oct. 11th the Osprey Agricultural Exhibition, was held at the village of McIntyre. The day was bright and clear, but the cold wind rendered the use of overcoats and heavy clothing a necessity as well as a comfort. It did not however prevent the farmers and their families, of this, as well as of the neighbouring townships, from coming in large numbers.

The varied departments were well filled, and with respect to quality the entries in each were uniformally good.

The roots shown were of a good size especially in carrots and turnips. Some good specimen of beets and other roots were also exhibited.

The exhibit of vegetables was very fine, the pumpkins and squashes especially attracting attention, while the exhibits of potatoes also merited attention.

There was but a small display of agricultural implements. In carriage Messers McKenzie and McKinnon of Meaford were the chief exhibitors and showed very fine double and single buggies, and of course carried off the first prize as usual.

The show of horses was superior to any ever exhibited in this section of the country being far ahead of the county fair in this respect, and would do credit to a Provincial or Dominion Exhibition.

The Fine arts department was hardly up to the mark although some fine specimens were shown.

The Butter exhibited was both large and excellant. In tub, rolls, and crocks, the several samples were so uniformally good that to a casual observer the difficulty in judging was clearly apparent. But after mature deliberation, the first prize was awarded, as many expected to Mrs. A. McIntyre the wife of our Deputy Reeve.

The sellection of the village of McIntyre as the place in which to hold the annual fair reflects great credit on the officers and directors of the society not only for accommodation in Mr. McLean's new hall, ample in the extreme for exhibitors to display their entries, but the manner in which things were conducted in and around the Hotel demanded the approval of all visitors. Notwithstanding the large atteudance none were seen during the whole day or night in a state of intoxication and the table furished by Mrs. McLean, was such as would reflect credit on any of our first class ity hotels.—COM.

EAST GREY FALL SHOW.

The annual Fall Show of the union Agricultural Society of East Grey and Artemesia, took place at Flesherton, on the 6th and 7th of this month. The first day was taken up in arranging things in the Hall, and judging of the same. The dawn of the second day opened with bad prospects for the success of the show, but the rain held off, and the day turned out favorably, consequently there was a large attendance, some 3,000 entering the gates. On the whole the show was a decided success.

There was a large exhibit of horses, and the judges had some difficulty in giving their decision in consequence of the superior quality of the animals shown.

CATTLE.—There were very few thoroughbreds, but in grades there was a good exhibit, and showed a great improvement on former years.

In sheep, the show was good, and the quality was fair.

The show of pigs was small, and not up to that of former years.

In carriages, the exhibit was large, and very creditable to the exhibitors. Very few agricultural implements were exhibited.

The roots and vegetables were ahead of anything shown in former years in fact this class was immense, both in quantity and quality.

The fruit crop being below the average this year the exhibit was not up to what has been usually shown, however what was shown was of good quality.

There was a large show of grain, and it was A 1. The grain this year (and we have visited most of the exhibitions) is above the average, both as to quantity and quality.

The display of flowers was good.

The Ladies work was well up to the mark.

Mr. Wm. Bulmer had a fine display of photographs.

The exhibit of fowls was scarcely up to former years. By the kindness of the Secretary we are enable to give below the,

NOTICE.

To the Editor of the STANDARD

SIR,—Through the columns of your valuable paper I wish to correct a mistake which I see in the posters announcing the sale of the McFarland and Campbell Grist Mill property, at Markdale, on 22nd of October. On the 8th of April last, Ritchie obtained a decree from the Court of Chancery against the said Mill Property, and sale was ordered. Ritchie is plaintiff in the case, and not McFarland as the sale notice would now lead the public to believe. Said decree is for a part of the purchase money still due to Ritchie.

OPENING OF THE S. & H. RAILWAY TO CHESLEY.

On Friday the Village of Chesley looked its best on the occasion of the formal opening of that section of the Stratford and Huron Railway just completed between Listowel and Chesley. Two excursion trains in the morning from Stratford carried numerous visitors from that and other points along the line, together with the officials of the road, to the place of celebration. The Walkerton Brass Band also accompanied the excursionists and furnished the music during the afternoon. On arrival there the guests were entertained at dinner by the corporation of the village. Some speeches were made by prominent gentlemen present, J. H. Hunter Esq. M. P. P., South Grey, and Dr. Landerkin, of Hanover, ex M. P., and a very plesant day's outing enjoyed. The road was found to be in good condition, and the visitors returned by special train in the evening. From Listowel, passing Palmerston and north to Harriston, the newely-opened road runs almost parallel with the Wellington, Grey, and Bruce Railway This portion of the country is well known. After passing Harriston, the line runs almost due north to Chesley through a splendid agricultural country composed of a portion of the township of Minto and the townships of Normanby, Bentinck, Brant, and Eldershe. This is a very important section of the road, for it runs through an extremely fine tract of agricultural country, and will offer facilities to residents and easy and cheapened access to the markets to which their products naturally tend. At Chesley there is a very fine iron bridge, about 60 feet high and nearly 400 feet long but it appears to be rather on the light side considering the nature of the traffic over it. Beyond Chesley the road is graded right through to Wiarton, the terminus, on Georgian Bay, and a gang of about 350 men are at present engaged in track laying, so that it is probable, if the weather continues favorable, that the whole road will be completed before the winter sets in. This will be the consumation of the old project of uniting Georgian Bay and Lake Erie by rail. The road will then be 166 miles in length.—Grey Review.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

IT is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage etc., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts., or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

A Brooklyn man answering a New York advertisement, 'How to win at Poker," received the following reply: 'Hold four aces, or don't poke."

A WISE DEACON.—Deacon Wilder, I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors visiting us so often."

"Bro. Taylor, the answer is very easy, I used Hop Bitters in time; kept my family well and saved the doctor bills. Three dollars worth of it kept us well and able to work all the time. I'll warrant you it has cost you and the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time."

"Deacon, I'll use your medicine hereafter."

'One half the world don't know how the other half live,' exclaimed a gossiping woman. 'O, well,' said her neighbor, 'don't worry about it; it isn't your fault if they don't.

When he came home tipsy he told his wife he had been out sherrynading.

A MATCHLESS MEDICINE.

The cooling, cleansing, soothing and healing properties of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry render it the best remedy in the world for all forms of bowel complaints, sicknes of the stomach, cramps, cholera morbus and dysentery. Purely vegetable. and always reliable.

A story goes the rounds that in Arkansas has been discovered a spring whose waters produce an intoxicating effect and taste like apple brandy. It is spoken of as the popular summer resort of the future.

A Pittsburgh man has invented a cannon that will 'hit a barn door five miles away.' Would it not be less expensive to have a smaller cannon, and haul it up within fifty yards of the barn door? or carry the barn door within fifty yards of the cannon?

IT NEVER FAILS.

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is an unfailing remedy for all kinds of bowel complaint.

'If you grasp a rattlesnake firmly about the neck it cannot hurt you,' says a western paper. Keeping a block ahead of the snake is also a good scheme.

GRANDMOTHER

Used to say, "Boys, if your blood is out of order try Burdock tea:" and they had to dig the Burdock and boil it down in kettles, making a nasty smelling decoction; now you get all the curative properties put up in a palative form in Burdock Blood Bitters. Price $ 1.00, trial size 10 cents.

A learned writer says that 'heaven keeps our light burning while we sleep.' Well, it does look that way when the figures on a gas bill stare the average citizen in the face.

GET THE BEST.

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the best, most prompt and safest cure for Cholera Morbus—Dysentery— Sick Stomach—Cramps—Cholic and Cholera Infantum that has yet been discovered. Its popularity is undimmed by age. All medicine dealers sell it.

The Intercolonial Geographical congress and exhibition opened at Venince on the first af September. It is attracting much attention. Russia, France, Italy and Sweden, have large exhibitions. England shows but poorly.

SEA SICKNESS.

The best remedy and preventative for Sea Sickness is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is also the best remedy for all forms of Summer complaints, whether on sea or land it will not fail you. All Druggists sell it 37½ cents per bottle.

'Dennis, my boy, come home and dine with me, though I have only a piece of roast beef and potatoes to offer you.' 'No apology,' replied Dennis; 'I will come with pleasure. It is the dinner I should have had at home barrin' the beef.'

HOW FAR WRONG IS THIS "OLL MAID?"

She had been called an old maid, and rather resented it. She said: "I am past thirty. I have a good home. I think you know I have had abundant opportunities to marry. I have been a bridesmaid a score of times. I ask my self with which one of the beautiful girls that I have seen take the marriage vow would I exchange places to-day? Not one. Some are living apart from their husbands; some are divorced; some are wives of drunken men; hang on the ragged edge of society, endeavoring to keep up appearances; some are toiling to support and educate their children, and these are the least miserable; some tread the narrow line beyond the boundry of which lies the mysterious land, and some have gone out in the darkness and unknown horrors, and some are dead. A few there are who are honored and loved and honored wives and mothers, with happy homes; but, alas! only a very few."

PEARLS OF TRUTH.

The man who possesses good health is always rich.

Without the rich heart, wealth is but an angry beggar.

Be of good cheer, is as wise a prescription for the health of the body as of the soul.

Ben Johnson says, somewhere in his Discoveries, that princes learn no art well but that of horsemanship; the reason he gives for which is, that the brave beast is no flatterer, and will throw a prince as readily as his groom.

Multitudes, in their haste to get rich, are ruined every year. The men who do things maturely, slowly, deliberately, are the men who oftenest succeed in life. People who are habitually in a hurry generally have to do things twice over.

Making people happy is neither an unimportant or small business. As I regard good nature as one of the richest fruits of true Christianity, so I regard the making of people round about us happy as one of the best manifestations of that Christian disposition which we are commanded to wear as a garment.

THE DAY OF REST.—Never was there a more blessed institution than the Sunday, the sacred day of rest from labor. For the soul's health and the body's health of the human race, on at least one day in seven there should be an ever-recurring intermission in daily toil. Thus, let a man attain to the period of three score years and ten, he has gained a holiday of ten years' duration, even if his lot has been labour for the remaining three-score years. Let childhood be taught to use, and manhood discreetly use, this blessed breathing time, as a day on which to raise the thoughts beyond that world not less than for purposes of innocent recreation.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

CHAPTER V.—Continued.

'Such a miserable morning! What a wretch I must look in this light. Captain Devere paid me compliments last night; fell in love with me, I believe—at least as much in love as a heavy dragoon can ever fall. If he saw me now! I believe I'll go to bed, after all.'

Mrs. Vavasor went to bed, and her eyes closed in grateful slumber before her head was fairly on the pillow. And as the loud-voiced clock over the stables chimed the quarter past ten she came floating down the stairs in a rose cashmere robe de satin, and all her feathery black ringlets afloat.

'Am I first, I wonder?' she said, peeping in. 'Ah, no; dear Sir John, what an early riser you always were. You don't forget your military habits, thoughyou are one of the richest baronets in Sussex.'

She held out her slender white hand, all aglitter with rings. But as she had refused it last night, so the baronet refused the proffered hand clasp this morning. He stood tall and stern, and grim as Radamanthus himself, drawn up to his full height.

'We are quite alone, Mrs.——Vavasor, since you have chosen to call yourself by that name, and we can afford to drop private theatricals. I fancied you would be down before Katherine, and I have been waiting for you here for the past hour. Harriet Harman, you must leave Scarswood, and at once.'

Sir John's guest had taken a tea-rose from a glass of flowers on the breakfast table, and was elaborately fastening it amid the luxuriance of her black hair. She laughed as her host ceased speaking, and made the rose secure ere she turned from the mirror.

'That's an improvement, I think—yellow roses always look well in black hair. What did you say, Sir John? Excuse my inattention, but the toilette before everything with us Parisiennes. I must leave Scarswood at once! Now, really, my dear baronet, that is a phase of hospitality it strikes menot strictly Arabian. Why must I go, and why at once?'

'Why! You ask that question?'

'Certainly I ask it. Why am I not to remain at Scarswood as long as I please?'

'Because,' the Indian officer said, frigidly, 'you are not fit to dwell an hour, a minute, under the same roof with—with my daughter. If you had possessed a woman's heart, a shadow of heart, one spark of womanly feeling, you would never have crossed Katherines path.'

'Again I ask, why?'

'I have given you your answer already. You are not fit—you are no associate for my young girl. I know the life you led at Homburg.'

'You do? And what do you know of my life to my discredit?' Mrs. Vavasor demanded, in her sprightliest manner. 'I sadly fear some malicious person has been poisoning your simple mind, my dear Sir John. I received a salary at Homburg, I admit; I lured a few weak-minded victims, with more money than brains, to the Kersall; I gambled ever so little perhaps myself. But what would you have? Poor little women must live, penniless widows must earn their bread and butter, and I laboured according to my light. Who can blame me? A gambler's decoy is not a very reputable profession, but I did not select it because I liked it. As you say here in England, it was "Hobson's choice." To work I was not able, to beg I was ashamed. And I gave it up, when I heard of your good fortune—for ever, I hope. I said to myself, "Harriet, child, why lead this naughty life any longer?—why not give it up, pack your trunks, go back to England, and become virtuous and happy? Here is your old friend—well, acquaintance, then—Colonel Dangerfield, a baronet now, with a magnificent estate in Sussex, and eight thousand a year. You did him good service once—he is not the man to forget past favours; he will never see you hungry or cold any more. And la petite is there—the little Katherine, whom fifteen years ago you were so fond of—a young lady, and a great heiress now. To see her once more, grown to a lovely English miss—what rapture!'

She clapped her little hands with a very foreign gesture, and lifted two great imploring eyes to his face. The baronet sighed heavily.

'Heaven help you, Harriet!' You might have been a better woman if you had loved the child or anything else. But you never loved any human creature in the world but yourself, and never will. I suppose it is not in your nature.'

Have you ever seen the swift pallor of sudden strong emotion show under rouge and pearl powder? It is not a pleasant sight. After the baronet's last words there was a dead pause, and in the dull, chill light he saw that ghastly change come over her.

'Never loved any human creature in this world!' She repeated his words slowly after him, then broke suddenly into a shrill laugh. 'Sir John Dangerfield, after half a century of this life's vicissitudes, the power to be astonished at anything earthly should have left all women, but you are sixty odd, are you not? and if I chose I could give you a glimpse of my past life that would rather take you by surprise. But I don't choose—at least not at present. Think me heartless, unprincipled, without conscience or womanly feeling—what you will—what does anything in this lower world signify except costly dresses, good wines, and comfortable incomes? And that brings me back to the point, and I tell you coolly, and deliberately, and determinedly, that I won't stir one step from Scarswood Park until I see fit.'

She folded her hands one over the other, and looked up in his set, stern face, with an aggravating smile on her own.

'It is of no use your blustering; if you should feel inclined that way, my dear baronet, it will do no good. I won't go. But you are too much a soldier and a gentleman to even try to bully a poor little woman like me. I have an object in view in coming to Scarswood; when that object is attained, I shall leave—not one instant before.'

'And your object is——'

'A secret at present, Sir John. As for your daughter'—with sneering emphasis—'I should be the best judge, I think, as to whether or no I am a fit associate for her. Miss Dangerfield appears to be a young lady in every way qualified to take care of herself. And now, Sir John, as we thoroughly understand each other, suppose we take breakfast. It is past ten, and I am hungry.'

'I never breakfast without Katherine,' the baronet answered coldly. 'Mrs. Harman!'—abruptly—'they say every man has his price—will you name yours, and leave Scarswood for ever?'

'Now, what an indelicate way of putting it—my price!' She laughed. 'Well, yes, Sir John, I don't mind owning as much. I have a price, Do you know what I said to myself last night when I first entered Scarswood? I said, 'I wonder if Sir John would marry me if I asked him?' And, Sir, John, I wonder if you wouldn't?'

'Mrs. Harman,' the Indian officer answered, with a look of disgust and contempt, 'let us keep to the subject in hand, if you please. I am in no humour for witticisms this morning.'

'Which, translated, means, I suppose, you would not marry me. It's not leap-year, I am aware, and my proposal may be a little out of place. But just think a moment, Sir John—what if the telling of your secret depended on it, and I should really like to be my lady?—what then?'

'Mrs. Harman, if you say another word of this kind I will turn you out of the house. Am I to understand, then, it is to tell you have come hither?'

His voice broke a little; the strong, sinewy hand that lay upon the broad window-sill clenched. He bore himself bravely before her, but there was mortal fear and mortal anguish in the old soldier's blue eyes.

'For God's sake tell me the truth!' he said. 'What have you come to do? I saw you in the conservatory last night alone with my nephew—do you mean to tell him?'.

Ther was an easy chair close to the window; the widow sank down in its silken cushions—all this time they had been standing—and she flung back her little, dainty, ringleted head.

'As this conversation will be prolonged, no doubt, until Miss Dangerfield appears, we may as well take a seat. So you saw me in the conservatory last night with your nephew! I did not know you did me the honour to watch me, Sir John. Well, yes, I was in the conservatory last night with Mr. Peter Dangerfield.'

'And you told him all?'

'I told him—nothing! My dear old baronet, what an imbecile you must think me. Why should I tell him?—a poor little pettifogging attorney. I only drew him out there—read him, you know—and he is very large print, indeed. Woe to the man or woman that stands in his path to fortune!—better for them they had never been born. He never felt a touch of pity or mercy in his life for any living thing, and never will.'

'I know it!' the baronet said with a groan. 'I know it to well. My life has been a life of terror since this inheritance fell to me—fearing him, fearing you. If he had been any other kind of a man than the kind he is, I—think—I know I would have braved all consequences, and told him the truth, and threw myself on his generosity. My lif has been one of prolonged misery since we came to Scarswood. I knew if you were alive, you would hunt me down as you have. It would be better for me I were a beggar on the streets.'

Mrs. Vavasor listened to this passionate tirade with airiest indifference.

'Then go and be a beggar on the streets,' she responded; 'nothing is easier. Throw yourself upon your nephew's generosity—tell him that little episode in both our lives that happened in Paris hospital fifteen years ago—tell him, and see how generous, how magnanimous he can be. You saw me talking to him, you say, in the conservatory last night. Would you like to know what we were talking about? Well—of Katherine!'

He stood and looked down at the small mocking face, and the derisive black eyes, gnawing the ends of his gray moustache.

'Of Katherine,' Mrs. Vavasor said. 'He told me he remembered her an infant here—in this very house, that she was two years old when she left England with papa and mamma. I asked him if he recalled her looks fifteen years ago, but naturally he did not.'

Mrs. Vavasor laughed at some inward joke.

'Do you know, Sir John, he is in love with the heiress of Scarswood, and would marry her if she would let him? He proposed last night—'

'What!' the baronet cried eagerly, 'he asked Katherine to marry him? And she—what did she say?'

'Called him a rickety dwarf—truthful, but unpleasant—and said no as your high-spirited daughter knows how to say it. He's not handsome, and Miss Dangerfield dearly loves beauty. She resembles her mother in many things—in that among the rest. She refused Mr. Dangerfield last night—still I think, my dear baronet, I shall have the pleasure of congratulating you upon the accession of a son-in-law.'

'What do you mean?'

'Excuse me; our haughty little Katherine might not thank me for meddling with her affaires de coeur. And I wish so much to stand well with the dear child. So affectionate a daughter can have no secrets from you—she will tell you all about it herself, no doubt, before the day ends. And, Sir John, I can safely promise you this much—I shall leave Scarswood before your daughter's wedding day, to return no more.

He looked at her in painful, anxious silence. He felt that behind her words a covert threat lay.

'Before her wedding day. The child is but seventeen, and not likely to marry for three or four years yet. I don't know what you mean, Harriet. For pity sake speak plainly—let us understand each other if we can. I don't want to be hard on you, Heaven knows. I would pour out money like water to secure my daughter's happiness—and you—oh surely! of all the creatures on earth, you should be the last to harm her. Don't betray me—don't betray her—don't ruin her life. I know I ought to tell; honour, truth, with all the instincts of my life, urge me to speak, but I know so well what the result would be, and I dare not!' A stifled sob shook the old soldier's voice. 'I love her better than ever father loved a child before—better I think than ever, if that were possible, since this new danger threatened. If you keep silence there is nothing to fear. In Heaven's name, Harriet, mention any sum you like, however exorbitant, and leave this house at once and for ever.'

She sat and listened, without one touch of pity for the love she could not fathom; she sat and watched him without one softening glance of the hard eyes. There was an unpleasant tightness about the thin lips, an almost diabolical malice in her furtive gaze.

'I will take ten thousand pounds, and I will leave Scarswood a week preceeding Miss Dangerfield's wedding day. The sooner the day is named the better. That is my ultimatum.'

'A week before her wedding day! do you harp on that? I tell you she has no idea of being married for years—a child of seventeen!'

'And I tell you she has. Children of seventeen in this year of grace have very grown up notions. Miss Dangerfield had two proposals of marriage last night; one she refused, one she accepted. If you have patience, your future son-in-law will be here for his answer before dinner. As Katherine will be on his side, your answer will be "Yes," of course, though he were the vilest blackguard in England. If that tall slip of a girl told you to swear black was white, you would swear it, and half believe you were not perjuring yourself. You are too old to learn wisdom now, my poor Sir John; but if you were a younger man, I would try and convince you of the folly of loving, with such blind, dog-like devotion, any creature on this earth. No one alive is worthy of it—least of all a woman. You would die to make her happy; more, the soul of honour, by training and instinct, you are yet ready to commit *dis*honour for her sake. And she—if you stand between her and this good-looking adventurer, only seen for the first time a few weeks ago, she will set you down as a tyrant and monster, and run away to Scotland the instant he asks her. Oh, yes, she will! I'm a woman, and I know my sex. They're like cats; stroke them the right way and they'll pur for ever; stroke them the wrong way, and their sharp claws are into your flesh, though yours the hand that has fed and caressed them all their life. Katherine is no worse than the the rest, and when she leaves you and runs away with him, she is only true to her feline nature. I will take ten thousand pounds, cash down, one week before the day fixed for Kathie's wedding, and I'll leave Scarswood, and you, and her, for ever—with the secret untold. The sooner the day is fixed, the sooner you are rid of me. And I'll never come back—I'll never ask you for another stiver. Now we understand each other, and we'll get along comfortably, I hope. Don't let us talk any more on this subject; it isn't a pleasant one; and Sir John, do, do try and look a little less like a martyr on the rack! Don't wear your heart on your sleeve, for the daws of society to peck at. You know that tiresome story of the Spartan boy and the fox, or wolf—which was it? The animal gnawed at his vitals, but he kept his cloak well over it and bore the agony with a smiling face. I think the horrible little brute lays hold of all mankind, sooner or later; only some suffer and make no sign, and others go through the world howling aloud over the pain. I have hid my wolf for the last nineteen years—you would not think it, would you? Don't let everybody see you have a secret, in your face, or they may find it out for themselves, if you do. Here comes our little truant at last; and Dieu merci, for I am absolutely famished!'

Clearing the last three steps with a jump, according to custom, all flutter-in crisp white muslin, and lit up with bright ribbons, Katherine came into the room, her happy face sunshiny enough to illuminate all Sussex.

'Late again, papa,' throwing her arms around him after her impetuous fashion and giving him a sounding kiss; 'but last night was an exceptional occasion in one's life; one was privileged to oversleep one's self this morning. Oh, papa!' with a little fluttering sigh, 'what a perfectly delicious party it was!'

'My dear,' her father said in a constrained voice, 'don't you see Mrs. Vavasor?'

She had not until that moment. In her own happiness she had forgotten the very existence of her father's guest. Her face clouded ever so slightly now as she turned to meet the little woman's gushing greeting.

'Dearest Katherine—oh, I really call you Katherine—how well, how bright you are looking this morning. Look at that radiant face, Sir John, and tell would you think this child had danced twenty-four consecutive times last night? I counted, my pet,' with her tinkling laugh—'danced until broad day this morning. Ah, how delightful to be sweet seventeen and able to look like this after a long night's steady waltzing.'

She would have kissed her, but Katherine's crystal clear eyes detected the rouge on her lips, and Katherine, who never resisted an impulse in her whole life, shrank back palpably.

'What!' Mrs. Vavasor exclaimed gayly; 'you won't kiss me, you proud little English girl? Never mind, I foresee we shall be great friends—don't you think so, Sir John?—if only for her mother's sake.'

'My mother's sake!' Katherine repeated. 'You knew my mother?'

'Very well, indeed, my dear—I was her most intimate friend. And you are like her—like her every way—in face, in manner, in voice. I should have been fond of you in any case, but since you resemble your mother so strongly, think how I must love you now?'

CHAPTER VI.

ASKING IN MARRIAGE.

Mrs. Vavasor might be never so vicacious, but it was a very silent, not to say gloomy, meal. Sir John sat moodily, eating little, and watching his daughter with strange new interest in his eyes. His perplexities seemed thickened around him. It was surely bad enough to have this obnoxious visitor on his hands, without an objectionable son-in-law flung in his face willy-nilly also. Who can the man be? He had not, if you will believe it, the remotest idea. He had been so completely absorbed by his espionage over that little widow all night ho hadscarcely once remarked his daughter. Who can that man be? He thought over the list of his unmarried masculine guests, and lit upon Captain De Vere, of the plungers, as the man.

'And if it be he,' the baronet thought with an inward groan, 'there is nothing for it but to make a clean breast of it before the wedding. And how will it be then? He is a very heavy swell, De Vere, and will one day write his name high in the peerage. He may be in love with Katherine now—how will it be when he knows the truth? Heaven help me! was ever man so badgered as I am?'

Katherine was very silent, too; even her hearty girl's morning apetite seemed to have failed her. She trifled with what lay on her plate, a tender half-smile on her lips and in her eyes. Love had taken away appetite. How handsome he had looked! the mellow lamp-light of the conservatory streaming across his dark, southern beauty. How nobly he had spoken! And he had feared refusal—this darling of the gods! He had thought himself unworthy the heiress of Scarswood—he who was worthy the heiress of a throne.

'I am glad I am an heiress for his sake,' she thought; 'I only wish my thousands were millions. Oh, Gaston to think that proverty would be an obstacle to me. I am glad you are poor—yes, glad, that I may give you all; that I may be in every way the good angle of your life.'

Mrs. Vavasor chattering cheerfully on all imaginable subjects, asked her a question. It had to be repeated ere it reached her ear, dulled by her b'issful trance. She lifted her dreamy eyes.

'What did you says, madame?'

Mrs. Vavasor's rather shrill laugh chimed forth.

'What did I say, madame! and I have asked her thee times. No, my dear, I'll not repeat my question as to whether you'll drive me to Castleford if it clears up, as I see it is going to do, being quite certain you will have other and pleasanter company. Look at that abstracted face, Sir John, and tell me what you think.'

The baronet's answer was a sort of growl, as he arose abruptly from the table.

'I am going to my study; Katherine and I want to speak to you—will you come?'

'Speak to me, papa?' Katherine repeated, faintly, her colour coming and going nervously for the first time in her life.

'Yes.' He offered her his arm, looking grimmer than she had ever seen him in all her experience. 'Mrs. Vavasor will find some other means of amusing herself besides that drive to Castleford. My carriage and coachman are at her service if she really desire it.'

Very well, papa,' Miss Dangerfield responded, with a meekness very different from her usual manner of frank impertinence which sat so well upon her. Could he know?' she was thinking in some trepidation. 'Can he know so soon? Did he see us in the conservatory together? and, oh! what will he say?'

Mrs. Vavasor watched the Stalwart soldierly figure, and the slight girlish form on his arm from sight, with a hard, cold glitter in her black eyes.

'Your coachman is at my service, Sir John, but your daughter is not, And her Royal Highness the Princess of Scarswood, would not let me kiss her this morning. Like her mother again—very much like her mother, indeed. And I have a good memory for all sights, little and great.'

Sir John's study was a cosy room, on the same floor with the breakfast parlour, and commanding a view of the entrance avenue with its arching elms He placed a chair for his daughter, still in grim silence, and Katherine sank into it in a little flutter of apprehension. Fear was a weakness that perhaps had never troubled the girl in her life. Whatever the blood in her veins, it was at least thoroughly brave And woman like, it was more for her lover than herself she troubled now.

'Papa won't like it,' she thought. 'Gaston's proverty will be a drawback to him. He will forget he was poor himself only half a year ago, and refuse his consent. No, he won't do that; he would consent to anything, I think, sooner than see me miserable.'

'Katherine,' her father began abruptly, 'Peter Dangerfield proposed last night.'

Katherine looked up with a start. Nothing was farther from her thought at that moment than her cousin Peter—she had entirely forgotten him and their quarrel of last night. 'Peter? Oh, yes, papa, I forgot all about it.'

'Humph! highly complimentary to Peter I need hardly ask if you refused him, Miss Dangerfield?'

'Certainly I refused him!' Miss Dangerfield retorted, her spirits rising, now she had found her tongue, 'and his declaration ended in no end of a row.' The heiress of Scarswood was a trifle slangy at times. 'That my temper—that's the truth—got one thing he said, and spoke to him as I had no business to. I'm sorry now and I apologized, but I know he'll never forget or forgive the affront. He's one of your nice, quiet, inoffensive people who go to church three times every Sunday, and who never forgive anything.'

'What did you say?'

Papa's voice was terribly stern—for him. Miss Dangerfield hung her head in deserved contrition.

'Papa, you know what an abominable temper I've got and still more abominable tongue—I called him a rickety dwarf.'

'Katherine!'

'I'm sorry, papa,' Katherine repeated sullenly, and not looking up. 'I apologized; it is all I can do; it's said and can't be recalled; scolding will do no good now.'

There was silence for a moment. A Pallor that even her wicked words seemed too trifling to call there overspread his face.

'A bad business,' he muttered. 'Peter Dangerfield will never forget or forgive your insult as long as he lives. Heaven help you now, child, if you are ever in his power.'

'In his power! an Peter!' Katherine said, lifting her head haughtily. 'What nonsense, papa! of course I shall never be in his power. And he provoked me into saying it, if it comes to that. What business had he to speak as he did, to insult—' Miss Dangerfield pulled herself up with a jerk, and looked up.

'Insult whom, my daughter?'

'Never mind, papa—a friend of mine.'

'And a rival of his. Was it Captain De Vere, Kathie?'

'Captain De Vere! Oh, dear, no, papa! Captains De Vere can fight his own battles—he's big enough and old enough. He has nothing to do with me.'

'Then somebody has. You are keeping something from me, and that is not like you, Kathie. You had another proposal last night.'

Katherine looked at her father in sheer amaze.

Why, papa, you must be a wizard how do you findthese things out? Did—you see me in the conservatory?'

'I did not—I did not deem it was necessary to place Katherine Dangerfield under surveillance at her first party.'

'Papa!'

'Oh, child! You compel me to say cruel things. The world will watch you if I do not, and report all shortcomings.'

'The world may,' said Katherine proudly. I have done nothing wrong—I know who told you—you would never play the spy; it was that odious woman in the breakfast room. Who is she, papa, and what does she do here, and how long is she going to stay? I don't know anything about her, I hate her already. Who is she?'

'She is Mrs. Vavasor. Never mind her at present, my dear—you are the subject under discussion. We have not come to this other lover yet—let us come to him at once. Two lovers! and yesterday I thought you a child. Well, well! it is the way of the world—the female portion of it at least. Katherine, who is the man?'

She looked up—grew very pale—met her father's stern, sorrowful eyes, and looked down.

'It is papa, papa! don't be angry He can't help being poor—and I—I like him—so,' with little gasps. 'Oh, papa, please! You never were cruel to your little Kathie in all your life—please don't begin now.'

He stood very still, listening to this outburst with a face that grew every moment grayer.

'And it needs such a preface as this You have to plead for him before even you tell his name. Who is he, Kathie?'

She got up, flung her arms around him, and hid her face on his shoulder.

'It is—papa, p-p-please don't be angry. It is Gaston Dantree!'

The murder was out! Of all the men he had thought of, he had never once thought of him. Gaston Dantree! An utter stranger—a singer of songs—his voice giving him the entree into houses where else he had never set his foot. A schemer probably—an adventurer certainly—a foreigner also—and Sir John Dangerfield had all your true-blue Briton's hearty detestation of foreigners.

'Kathie,' he could just exclaim, 'that man!'

"DON'T KNOW HALF THEIR VALUE.—They cured me of Ague, Billiousness and Kidney Complaint, as recommend. I had a half bottle left which I used for my two little girls, who the Doctors and neighbours said could not be cured. I would have lost both of them one night if I had not given them Hop Bitters. They did them so much good I continued their use until they were cured. That is why I say you do not know half the value of Hop Bitters, and do not recommend them high enough."—B., Rochester, N. Is authorized to receive advertisements for this paper

A. O. U. W.

On Wednesday evening, the 19th inst., a Lodge of the Antient Order of United Workmen with 16 charter members was instituted in Markdale, by Prof. Samuel, of Hamilton. The objects of the Society are to secure a competency to the wife and children of a deceased member; also for the general improvement of the members and assistance in sickness. It is the duty of every married man to make some provision for his family in the the case of death, and the A. O. U. W. affords him that privlege at very slight cost. Houses are insured, although not one in twenty are distroyed, but we all have to die, therefore how much more necessary is it that we should insure our lives, especially those who have nothing but their daily labor to depend on. The above society is formed for mutual benefit, and as we before stated, for the purpose of securing a competency for those we leave behind in case of death, at the lowest possible cost. Below we give a list of the officers from whom all information can be obtained. Parties wishing to join should do so before the experation of the next three weeks as they will save $1, by so doing.

LIST OF OFFICERS.

Rev. A. Wilson, P. M. W.; Wm Brown, M. W.; Wm. Lucas, F.; C. W. Rutledde, O.; R. H. Byers, R. R. D. Irvine F.; A. Butter, R.; Robt. Askin, G.; T. Mathews, I. W.; E. C. Large, O. W. Trustees.—Wm. Lucas, A. McIntyre, and C. W. Rut.

There was also a lodge instituted in Priceville on Monday, the 17th inst. The followingare the names of the officers as far as we have been able to obtain them:—Mr. Webster, M. W.; C. C. James, P. M.; Jas. Watson, F.; W. Watson, G.; Dr. Bennet, T.; W. B. Grier, R. The lodge is called Priceville lodge 144.

There was also a lodge formed in Flesherton on Thursday 20th inst. The following are the names of the officers: J. Gordon, P. M. W.; M. Richardson, M. W.; S. Damude, M. F.; A. Munshaw, O.; A. R. Fawcett, R.; W. Strain, F.; J. W. Bates, R.; G. L. Dodds, G.; G. Glasford, I. W.; D. White, O. W. Trustees.—S. Damude, T. Addison, A. Munshaw.

Our cotem south is mad, and says all manner of childish things in regard to our village and our selves, and no doubt thinks he is doing bigthings. It reminds us of a story, often told, of a certain little woman who was often seen thrashing her big, good-natured husband. He was asked why he allowed it. "Well," he said, "it pleased her and don't hurt me." So say we.

THE 5th of November is to be celebrated in Markdale by several of the neighboring Lodges of Loyal Orangemen dining together in the Orange Hall. Weather permitting there will be the usual procession in regalia, in the afternoon the members of the Order will be addressed in the Dufferin Hall, and a grand concert in the same place in the evening. The carrying out of the day's programme is in the hands of the Christ Church Ladies' Aid Society. The proceeds of the day are to be given to the Building Fund of the Church; and we would venture to add that since the church people of Markdale have done so much to beautify our village by erecting so handsome a building, and beautifying their grounds, thereby giving a tone to our village which it would not otherwise possess, they deserve the hearty support of all classes of our citizens.

OSPREY CORRESPONDENCE

THE English Church in Mawell is being thoroughly overhauled, the ceiling is being raised, a belfry put to the front, and an addition to the rear. The contractor, Mr. George Brownridge, will soon have the woodwork completed, and when painted and finished will give the building quite an imposing appearance.

Mr. Wright Devitt is leaving Maxwell with the intention of carrying on the furniture business in Stayner. Mr. and Mrs. Devitt have the best wishes of their numerous friends, and all wish them success in their new home.

The farmers in this section of the country are getting their root crops gathered together as quickly as possible, fearing the approach of winter

All Hallow Eve will soon be here and the juveniles are bent on having their share of the fun. People would do well to have their cabbage in and their gates secured, as the youths are very playful.

Weather very wet.

Roads becoming bad.

The work on St. Mary's Church here, is being pushed ahead and will add much to its appearance.

An accident occured last Wenesday night, at Mr. W. Long's threshing, which very nearly proved fatal to several persons. It seems that the mow contained two kinds of grain, and when they had nearly finished one kind, the other part tipped over and covered Mr. Long and his son Willie, Mr. Nicholson, and Robbie Burk, a son of Mr. R. T. Burk of the 8th con. No time wos lost in throwing the sheaves off the unfortunate men, and they were soon recovered, quite out of breath, but they got over it without serious injury.

A social was held in the Presbyterian Church at McIntyre, on Tuesday the 11th inst., which passed off very pleasently. Mrs. John L. B. Hamlin and Miss Drummond of Maxwell, "discoursed sweet music to the ear"; Mr. N. G. Allister, of Feversham gave an amusing reading; Mr. Chisholm, gave a very interesting lecture; Mr. W. L. B. Hamlin gave some of his popular Recitations; and E. J. J. Furguson gave some Readings. The proceeds amounted to about $30. We congragulate Mr. Chisholm on his success, as it was got up on very short notice.

The remains of Mr. Joseph Law, whose sudden death was noticed in the last Monitor, were brought here and interred in the cemetery on Saturday last. On Sunday evening the funeral sermon was preached in the M. E. Church by the Rev. R. Large, to a very large congregation. In referance to his death we get the following particulars from the Brantford Telegram; "Last (Wednesday) evening the Literary Society, of Burgessville, gave one of their popular concerts in the hall of the village—that is they adver- advertised one but a most untoward circumstance put an end to the performance almost as soon as it had commenced. The Society owing to a lack of talent in the village and in their desire to make their meetings attractive to their patrons, always engaged outside vocalists to help them through. This time Miss Addison, of Norwich, and Mr, Jas. Kennedy, of Brantford, were secured. Each had sung one piece when the chairman called upon a young man named Law, teacher in the Holbroke school, to give the audience a recitation. Mr. Law rose from his seat only to fall limp and lifeless into the arms of a friend. Not a word did he say in answer to the request, but simply got up to recieve Death's stroke. No doctor being in the room appliances of various kinds were at once put in use by friends who were loth to believe the young man beyond all human aid. For an hour and a half they rubbed him until the arrival of the doctor put an end to their well meant efforts. It was then pronounced a case of heart disease and the excited company, shocked beyond measure at the suddenness of the calamity, dispersed to their homes, some of them, however, remaining in the concert room until long after midnight watching the body and making arrangements for its removal. An estimable young man, Mr Law's friends will hear of his sad and sudden taken off in the heyday of life with deep regret.—Monitor,

REPLY TO REV. Mr. WARD—PART IV.

Mr. Ward proceeds, "Any reasonable man will grant that the words 'bishop' and 'presbyters' being promiscuously used, mere Presbyters being called bishops in scripture, does not prove that all the powers which belong to those we now call bishops were lodged in the presbyters." Strike the word "not" out of the above sentence, and it will then express a reasonable, a logical, and a scriptural idea; as it stands, it is very nonsense, representing scripture as a jumble of unmeaning, unintelligible jargon, without coherence or common sense. What we read in the Bible of the "Children of Isreal," the "seed of Jacob," or the "heirs of the promise," we are at no loss to know who are the parties designated; we never for a moment suppose that two or three classes are meant: and why? Simply because common sense tells us. Why then do we not allow common sense and reason to guide us in reading the scripture same as any other book? The Rev. gentleman has already admitted that the term 'bishop' and 'presbyter' are interchangeably used in scripture represent one and the same officer in the Apostolic Church; yet in the above sentence, in order to bolster up his theory he introduces another distinction unknown to Apostolic times—viz.: "presbyter" and "mere presbyter. The word "presbyter" Mr. Ward thinks stands for him "we now call bishop," and "mere presbyter" for "priest," or some other inferior officer" The careful Bible student will at once perceive the distinction is in the the last degree fanciful, and has no foundation either in Scipture or the early history of the Christian Church.

The fact is "those we now call Bishops" has no standing in the Apostolic church, they are as we have already shown, a creation of after ages who, we hesitate not to say, have no Apostolic progenitor amongst the eleven who met on that memorable day in the "upper room at Jerusalem.

Mr Ward goes on to say "the only method then to prove that the power of "ordination" belongs to presbyters is to show that whoever in the Scripture are called presbyters or bishops were invested with that power, which can never be done."

We ask your readers to carefully note this phrase "which can never be done"—evidently the Rev. gentleman rests his whole case here; if this can "be done"—if we can show from scripture that those who were "called presbyters or bishops" were invested with "the power of ordination" and actually did perform that rite, then Mr. Ward's whole case must fall to the ground like a "castle of cards."

Now for the proof:—"Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery." I Tim., iv, 14. Here then is ordination by those who were "called presbyters;" Paul tells us. Timothy was ordained "with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery." In the 20th chapter of Acts we find recorded Paul's address to the elders or presbyters of the Church of Ephesus, in which these words occur—"Take heed unto yourselves and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers," or bishops as it is in the revised version. Here again Paul tells us that the "presbyters" were the bishops or overseers of the flock by appointment of the Holy Ghost: he also tells us that these Holy Ghost appointed presbyters "ordained" Timothy as we have shown above; but it may be urged this is a case of ordination by "presbyters" not by "mere presbyters," to which we reply, we find no such distinction in scripture. "to the law and to the testimony."

Mr. Ward proceeds:—"For if presbyter or elders had the power of ordination, why should Paul leave Titus in Crete on purpose to ordain elders in every city? Titus i, 5, when we know that island had been converted to Christianity long before, and doubtless had many presbyters among them, &c."—Where, we ask, did the Rev. gentlemen get this information? Who told him that the Cretan Christians "had many presbyters among them" previous to the coming of Titus? This is the veriest assumption without one title of evidence—an assumption, too, which does violence and runs counter to every practice and principle enunciated throughout the New Testament. That Christianity had been preached in Crete, and that many of the heathen had embraced its doctrine before the comming thither of Titus, we freely admit; but that the Church had been organized there previous to this time we as strenuously deny, and we challenge Mr. Ward, or any body else, to prove the contrary. Let us look at the record—"For this cause left I the in Crete, that thou should set in order the things that are wanting, and appoint elders in every city as I gave the charge." I quote from the revised version. Titust was left behind "to set in order the things that were wanting," that is to say, to organize the Church and appoint its officers—appoint elders in every city. The peculiar form of the phraseology shows that the Church there had not previously been organized, had such been the case, Paul would have enjoined Titus to appoint elders in every church, not in every city.

The argument to be drawn from this passage of scripture is entirely opposed to episcopacy as we shall show. Had there been, as Mr. Ward says, "many presbyters among them," Paul could not in truth have referred to the eldership as the the "things that were wanting;" yet Paul says—"For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou should set in order the things that were wanting and appoint elders in every city." Mr. Ward says these things were not wanting at all, "that there had been many presbyters among them."—Now here is a remarkable contradiction—the Apostle Paul affirms, Mr. Ward denies; who is right? Which of them are we to believe. They cannot both be right, therefore one of them must be mistaken. With all due deference to the Rev. gentlemen, we prefer to take sides with Paul, even against the teachings of the "Catholic Apostolic Church of England."

In this connection we remark further, that the elders whom Titus was to ordain in every city of Crete could not have been the representatives of "those we now call bishops." The absurdity of having two or more bishops, In the modern acceptation of the term, presiding over the few poor despised Christian converts to be found in every city in Crete, will be apparent to all. Why the metropolis of Ontario, together with several hundred square miles of territory, containg a large and wealthy population, can now only "sport" one bishop; the same is true of London, Liverpool, Manchester, &c.; yet our Episcopalian friends would have us believe that several bishops, genuine prototypes of "those we now call bishops," were to be found in every city of Crete in Apostolic times.

Mr. Ward proceeds—"To what has been said we might for farther proof add the joint testimony of all Christendom for fifteen hundred years; nor can one single instance of a valid ordination be produced in all that time other than by a bishop." The blindness of prejudice is an incurable malady it actually leads men to ignore the plain teachings of scripture, when these happen to clash with their own pre-concieved notions.

We have already frequently shown that Timothy's ordination was by the "laying on of the hands of the presbytery," and not by a bishop. I Tim. iv. 14. Yet Mr. Ward says that not a single instance of "valid ordination can be produced by other than a bishop.—Timothy was not ordained by a bishop, therefore according to Mr. Ward, Timothy's ordination "was not valid." Here again the Apostle Paul and the Rev. gentleman are in direct opposition; both cannot be right, therefore one of them must be in error.

The Rev. gentleman summarizes his whole case as follows:—"In the life time of the Apostles we find three orders, Apostles, Presbyters or Bishops, and Deacons. In the next generation we find three orders, Bishops, Presbyters, and Deacons." To the first of these assertions we say yes; to the last we say no, emphatically. In the "next generation" after the Apostles we find but two orders, viz.: Presbyters and Deacons, and we challenge Mr. Ward to show by clear and undisputed historic testimony to make good his assertion,—"it cannot be done." Of course during the time of the Apostles, who were the fathers and founders of the Christian Church, there were the "three orders; but as we have already shown they left no successors. Where do we now find the gift of tongues, the gift of healing, or the power of working miracles? In our next article we shall deal with the historic Testimony bearing upon the government and polity of the Apostolic Church. We have alread shown that Episcopacy is not to be found in the Christian Church of the New Testament era; in ournextwe shall show that Episcopacy is not to be found in the next generation after the Apostolic age. We therefore hesitate not to affirm that the Episcopal form of Government has not subsisted either in name or in fact in the Christian Church "from the beginning;" on the contrary, as we have shown already, and as we shall hereafter show, Presbytery was the form of government which obtained in the Church both during the Apostolic age and for several generations afterwards.

We now close part IV.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale, Oct. 18 1881.

To the Editor.

DEAR SIR,—I see our friend "Tammas Tickle" is tickling away again. Tammas is a true Scotchman, he won't give in, and he is far traveled too; he says himself that he has walked every foot of the way from "Maradite to John O Groat's." Most remarkable Tammas! I wonder if "Tibbie" was along with him on the long journey. I think Tammas is just wanting to air himself a little. I cannot think he is in earnest about "Bonnie Dundee," or can it be possible that he is better acquainted with what is sung at concerts than in the "Kirk?" "Bonnie Dundee" is a fine song, and is set to a beautiful air, but so far as we know, neither have been yet introduced into public worship. Tibbie is a little jealous, I see. She is afraid of Tammas committing himself in the matter of distances; honest woman! The conjugal affection seems so strong that I venture to affirm that Tammas never needed to sing the song:

> "Oh, Tibbie I ha'e seen the day
> Ye wadna been sae shy."

I do not expect to be able to convince Tammas on every point, for, like every Scotchman, he will stick to his point, although he has no point to stick to. I am a little in doubt of Tammas being a genuine Scotchman however, for if he was, he would not be so much in favor of the organ. I once read of a Scotchman "an elder o' the kirk," who was visiting some friends on the English side of the Tweed, and being at a prayer meeting one night where an organ was used in connection with the singing, he was asked to lead in prayer, "na, na," he said, "call upon the machine, if it can praise it can pray." I have also heard of a Non-conformest (Scotch) minister who had in vain resisted the introduction of instrumental music, and who, as a last resort, said, when going to commence the service on the first Sabbath after the instrumentalists had carried their way, "Let us praise God by singing and fiddling the nineteenth psalm," but in Tammas we have an advocate for the instrument.

Tammas insists that "the Almighty." makes the organs; course we admit that He makes all things in this sense. Our friend however wisely adds, "we put them thegither"; that makes a'l the difference. God also made the Ball with which the deeply lamented President Garfield was wounded, but it was Guitteau that shot him. Tammas should remember that it is not the music that is the praise, but the truth expressed in and by the musical sound is. The sacrifice God requires is not the "soul of music shed" by the harp of Tara, but his own truth, which is spiritual, poured forth in the living and loving accents which a redeemed one alone can breathe. Can an organ express a spiritual truth? Is it a "sounding brass and tinkling symbal" that pleases God? Paul did not think so; but Tammas will perhaps say with a great many more that it is not the organ that worships, it only helps folk to sing. This is the same argument that is used by our Romish friends when speaking of their Beads, Images, Crosses, &c. It is not to the Saints that they pray, these are only used "as helps" in their prayers, but we know that the cross used as "a help" soon began to be adored. Again many people say that organs are so fashionable, that if we are to keep pace with the times, we must have one too; this is an old style of doing things. "If you are in Rome you must do as the Romans do," we say not at all; because my neighbour smokes tobacco, drinks "forty rod" until he is drunk, curses and blasphemes the Holy name, profanes the sacred day by keeping an open house for every graceless being who is going from house, to house either to give or get some malicious, slanderous gossip, I say because my neighbor does so, am I to do so? Surely not. If our Saviour had conformed to the times in which he lived he would never have been crucified; His vicarious death would never have taken place, the world would still have been unredeemed, we would still have been offering the morning and evening sacrifice, or wallowing in Pagan idolatry. The Mosaic Law with its types and symbols, its rites and its ceremonies would still have been binding upon us (if, as some affirm, we are the "lost tribes") and just because our Great High Priest did not conform to the sinful practices of His times, He suffered—He bled—He died, and all the attendant blessings are ours. We are not to be the slaves of circumstances, but circumstances are to be the slaves to us. Mr. Tickle says we only put them "thegither". What does the builder of a musical instrument aim at when he is putting it "thegither"? He simply tries to make an instrument to imitate the human voice, and when he has done his best, it is only a very clumsy imitation. True, the compass is much greater than the human voice, but from "Bass to "Alto" it is made up entirely of "Tones" and "Semi-tones. Now, a well cultivated voice can divide a Tone into many parts. It was said of Jenny Lind, the "Swedish nightingale", a quarter of a century ago, that she could take a thirty-second part of a tone, that is, that she could make thirty two distinct sounds in any of the full tones, and Jenny was said to be Scotch too, Tammas. The organ makes two, hence we say it is comparatively clumsy.

If Tammas will look back to his concert going days, and recall to mind the "encores" on these occasions, he will agree with me that it was the singers who were called back, not the fiddler in the orchestra; I remember being in the Italian Opera London England, when Marco and Grissi were performing, as was supposed, for the last time to a London audience; it was a "gala" night, Her Majesty and Her consort honored the performance with their presence; the orchestra was complete with the best players Europe could produce. Their selections were the choicest, and executed with exquisite taste; the performance went on. The two great singers were recalled many, many times, but the orchestra, although everything that could be desired, were allowed to go without a single encore. God made the singers, man put the instruments "thegither". Yes, Tammas, God made man in His own image, with Heavenly powers, (alas, too often degraded) "but man has sought out many inventions," and among others, organs to use in His worship. Do not suppose however that I don't like music, no no. I am very fond of it, either vocal or instrumental. I like an organ very well, a piano much better, and the Human Voice far better than both put together. Every family ought to have a musical instrument, and use it at least every night, excepting Sabbath, but Sabbath is too sacred a day to indulge any sensuous gratification more than is really necessary. If our Educational Magnates were to insist on music being taught in our Common Schools as it is in Germany, I think it would be well for us; every boy and girl should learn to sing, play a musical instrument, and dance.

Tammas should remember that there is not a single passage in the New Testament enjoining, or even admitting instrumental music to be used in Praise; indeed it is very evident that no such thing was intended. Our worship, to be true worship, must be spiritual, not sensuous. Our Saviour swept away all ritual when he said to the woman of Samaria, "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true Worshiper shall worship the Father in Spirit and in Truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship him"; and allowing Tammas to be what, by his language he professes to be, a Scotchman, he will in all probability be a member of the Presbyterian Church, a church, which more than any other church that I know of, has always been resolute against any innovations in her worship whatever; and if so, we would call his attention to his confession of faith, where he will find the following passage: "The whole council of God concerning all things necessary for His own glory, man's salvation, faith and life, is either expressly set down in Scripture, or by good and necessary consequence may be deduced from Scripture unto which nothing at any time is to be added." Tammas may not have subscribed his name to this, although thousands of the best and most learned men that ever lived have done so, but by his profession he is looked upon as having "testified" his adherence thereto.

Tammas holds out strongly for praising with "a loud noise joyfully," and seems to think that I would rather sit by the willows and weep; I am not one of the disconsolates. I like major tunes as well as minors, in their own place; but many like our friend seem to think that a "loud noise" is all that is wanted; loud singing does not always show deep piety, any more than loud lamentations shew deep grief; it has often been remarked that when the sorrow penetrates to our "inmost heart" the tear fountain is dried up; we have an eminent instance of this recoreded in the public papers now in reference to heart stricken widow of President Garfield; God was not in the whirlwind, nor in the thunder, but in the "small still voice." These Scotch Presbyterians are a sturdy race in church matters, as well as on the battle field. They have a great deal to boast of; they can refer us back to the beginning of the eighth century, when nearly the whole world had succumbed to the Papacy, they can point to at Scotland being the only spot in Europe that had not yielded to the demands of the Pope; and that a Scotchman stood almost unaided, in the centre of Europe, and fought successfully in argument, not only the English Papists, but all others who opposed the simplicity of the cause he had so much at heart; the last we hear of this good man is that the Pope decided in Council that if he did not retract his errors he should be delivered up to everlasting damnation, and then requested Boniface to send him to Rome under a sure guard; and here we lose sight of him. The Scotch can also invite the scholar back to the fifteenth century, when manhood seem to have been so low in Ireland, that the Irish took a Scotchman, whom they thought so much superior to themselves, that they made a Saint of him—yea, St. Patrick. And since the dawn of Reformation they have a noble record; they suffered ignominy, shame, reproach and death, in every shape and form, rather than hearken to man, and slight the God that bought them; and at the present day they (the Scotch Presbyterians, I mean) can boast of their church being as pure in Doctrine, Government and worship, as any church under the sun. The intelligent Presbyterian can easily afford to hear the thousands of ignorant babblers traduce his church; he knows that she is accused by many who ought to know better of holdidg doctrines which she repudiates. She holds by the word, and insists on a "Thus saith the Lord," for every thing, and will not suffer human inventions to come between her and her God; of late however she has in some instances (but not yet as a church) swerved from the simplicity that is in the church, as planted by our Saviour and His apostles, I mean in reference to this organ question, and our friend "Tammas" seems to be somewhat influenced by it also; I have no wish to enter upon that question here, but state plainly my conviction, that it is anti-Presbyterian, anti-Christian, and anti-Scriptural; and if Tammas will put himself to the trouble to look back to the records of Presbytarianism, he will not find the slightest trace of it until the past few years; nor will he find a single sentence commanding, or advising in all the New Testament, why Tammas encourage the introduction of an organ into the church to take part in the worship of the searcher of hearts, since He plainly tells us that if we would worship him, we must do so in spirit.

CLIPPINGS FROM OUR LOCAL EXCHANGES.

ON Monday the first regular passenger train left Chesley for Stratford and Port Dover, in charge of Conductor Crann. There are two daily trains going south, and two arriving from the south, every other day there is a mixed train, which makes three trains each way. The morning train leaves Chesley at 6 a. m., the next 10:25 a. m., and every Monday, Tuesday and Friday, mixed 11. The arrival of the trains are timed for 1:38 p. m., 7:30 and 11:5 p. m.—Chesley Enterprise.

We noticed last week that a Grand Opening excursion from Durham to Niagara Falls for to-morrow (Friday.) The bills announcing the same were posted throughout the country; and even a "Proclamation" appointing Friday a "Civic Holliday" was issued but we are sorry to say that the Grand Excursion, to which so many were looking anxiously forward to has turned out a Grand Fizzle. The affair was postponed. "There is many a slip," &c. &c. Who's to blame?—Grey Review.

A NEW SWINDLE.—Two sharpers work this swindle. One buys a horse and makes a sale at a very low price to some farmer, telling some plausible story to account for his willingness to take half what the animal is worth. In the course of four or five days along comes the second man, who claims to run a livery stable, and he identifies the horse as one stolen from him. He talks big, blusters around, and either scares the farmer in to giving up the horse or "settling the case" by paying a good round sum. The game has been worked twice in this county and once in Macomb, and will be again unless farmers are warned against the rascals.—Hamilton Spectator.

PERSONAL.—J. H. James, teacher of voice culture, music and elocution, returns to Markdale this week. He intends organizing classes, pubic and private, in M. and surrounding country immediately. He is a certified teacher of both the staff and tonic sol fa me sho do of music, as he has been under some of the best masters in America; has made voice culture a speciality; has examined almost every systen of teaching; he claims to have the shortest and most thorough method for teaching vocal music; extant elocution is taught on the phonitic, imitative, and analytical principle. He will be in town working up the classes in afew days. We would say to all especially the young people, embrace the present opportunity and get a knowledge of those very important subjects.

The law firm of Lane and Rowe is to be dissolved on the first of November, Mr. R. E. Crawford filling the vacancy of Mr. Rowe who goes to Markdale to open an office there.—Tribune.

(FROM BRAZIL.)

The New Compound, its wonderful affinity to the Digestive Apparatus and the Liver, increasing the dissolving juices, relieving almost instantly the dreadful results of Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and the TORPID LIVER, makes Zopesa an every day necessity in every house.

It acts gently and speedily in Billiousness, Costiveness, Headache, Sick Headache, Distress after Eating, Wind on the Stomach, Heartburn, Pains in the Side and Back, Want of Appetite. Want of Energy, Low Spirits, Foul Stomach. It invigorates the Liver, carries off all surplus bile, regulates the Bowels, and gives tone to the whole system.

Cut this out and take it to your Druggist and get a 10 cent Sample, or a large bottle for 75 cents, and tell your neighbor about it.

NOTICE.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Through the columns of your valuable paper I wish to correct a mistake which I see in the posters announcing the sale of the McFarland and Campbell Grist Mill property, at Markdale, on 22nd of October. On the 8th of April last, Ritchie obtained a decree from the Court of Chancery against the said Mill Property, and sale was ordered. Ritchie is plaintiff in the case, and not McFarland as the sale notice would now lead the public to believe. Said decree is for a part of the purchase money still due to Ritchie.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!

LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.

A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham st., N. Y.

Catharctic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel, or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts., or two postage stamps.

MELANCTHON AGRICULTURAL EXHIBITION.

The annual Exhibition of the Melancthon Agricultural Society, was held here on Thursday and Friday last, and proved to be very successful. The first day of the show the weather was fair, although somewhat cool, but Friday morning was gloomy, and during the forenoon there was some rain, which no doubt prevented many from attending. The afternoon turned out fine, and afforded an opportunity for the large crowds in the village to visit the show grounds, and it is estimated that between two and three thousand visitors passed through the gates, the receipts being considerably in excess of any previous year. Of the exhibition itself it is unnecessary to speak, suffice it to say, that it was not behind any of its predecessors in point of general excellence. We might say that the officers and directors deserve [illegible] for their well directed labors [illegible] no doubt, contributed in a great measure to the success of the show. For the names of the successful competitors in the various departments we refer our readers to the

THE POWER OF THE PRESS.

One of the old-time editors of Michigan was boasting the other day that he had never been sued for libel, or attacked in his sanctum, but he could recall many narrow escapes. Twenty-five years ago, he was running a red-hot paper on the line of the Michigan Central railroad. A man named Carson, who was running for some country office, was given a bad racket, and the editor received a note that if he had anything more to say he might expect to receive a good pounding. He had a still more bitter attack the next week, and the paper was hardly mailed before in walked Carson, the candidate accompanied by a brother and two cousins. The four were strapping big fellows, and each were armed with a horsewhip. The two compositors and the "devil" got up with all speed, leaving the editor without support. He realized the situation at once, and began:

"Walk in, gentlemen; I presume you have come to horsewhip me?"

"We have," they answered.

"Very well. Have you thoroughly considered this matter?"

It doesn't need any consideration," replied Carson," "You have lied about me, and I am going to lick you within an inch of your life!"

"Just so, my friend; but first hear what I have to say. Did you ever hear of the press being stopped because the editor was cow-hided?"

"I dunno."

Well, you never did. Lick me all you chose, and my paper comes out week after week just the same. The power of the press is next to the lever that runs the universe. It makes or brakes parties, builds up or tears down, plants or destroys. Aggravate the editor and the press becomes a sword to wound or kill. Wallop me if you will, but next week I will come out more bitter than ever."

There was an embarrassing silence right here, and the face of each horsewhipper had an anxious look.

"It will go out to the world—to America, Canada, England, France—aye! clear to Jerusalem, that the Carson family of this county live on roots and johnny-cake; that they stole a dog from a blind man; that they murdered a pedlar for a pair of two shilling suspenders; that the women are club-footed, and the men work their ears when they sing; that the ——"

"What is the regular subscription price to the Herald:" interrupted Carson.

"Only twelve shillings a year."

"Put us four down."

"Very well—six dollars—that's correct. Run in and see me—all of you, and if any of you want to see any Detroit exchanges I shall only be too glad to serve you."—Detroit Free Press.

[illegible] Deacon.—Deacon Wilder, I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors visiting us so often."

"Bro. Taylor, the answer is very easy, I used Hop Bitters in time; kept my family well and saved the doctor bills. Three dollars worth of it kept us well and able to work all the time. I'll warrant you it has cost you and the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time."

"Deacon, I'll use your medicine hereafter."

SEA SICKNESS.

The best remedy and preventative for Sea Sickness is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is also the best remedy for all forms of Summer complaints, whether on sea or land it will not fail you. All Druggists sell it 37½ cents per bottle.

A quarrel over handling the ring recently caused a wedding to be broken off at the very altar in a Lowville, N. Y. Church.

A farmer in the Midlands of England lately turned about ten acres into a mushroom bed, and made a profit of $50 in less than three months.

GRANDMOTHER

Used to say, "Boys, if your blood is out of order try Burdock tea:" and they had to dig the Burdock and boil it down in kettles, making a nasty smelling decoction; now you get all the curative properties put up in a palative form in Burdock Blood Bitters. Price $ 1.00, trial size 10 cents.

A drinking saloon in Buffalo has on its curtain, so that it may be seen from the street, "Our trust is in God" —a delicate way of hinting that no credit is given.

A Broker in New York advertises for one million Confederate bonds at a quarter of one per cent. He has already bought over a million, and says he is acting for foreign parties.

A MATCHLESS MEDICINE.

The cooling, cleansing, soothing and healing properties of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry render it the best remedy in the world for all forms of bowel complaints, sicknes of the stomach, cramps, cholera morbus and dysentery. Purely vegetable, and always reliable.

There was great excitement throughout Ireland over the arrest at Dublin, of Parnell, Ireland's Dictator. He is charged with inciting the people to intimidate others from paying their rents, and intimidating tenants from taking advantage of the benefits accruing under the new Law Act.

A Boston firm made $40,000 out of the Garfield pictures, and now small effigies of Guiteau are finding a ready sale in some parts of New York city. They consist of a miniature scaffold beam of pine wood, from which a pasteboard figure of Guiteau is suspended by a cord.

"THE LEAVES SHALL BE FOR THE HEALING OF THE NATIONS."

The leaf of the Wild Strawberry has verified that Scriptural quotation. Dr Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the marvel of healing in all varieties of Summer Complaints, and Fluxey, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum and every form of Bowel Complaints of children or adults promptly yields to its power of healing.

An æsthetic correspondent of the New York Herald thinks that the only commentator who ever did justice to the "improvements" of civilization at Niagara Falls was an Indian who watched all day the workmen building a bridge from Goat Island to the mainland, and as he rose at nightfall to go away said heartily, "Damn Yankee! Ugh!"

WHERE WILLIE LIES.

BY STUTCHLA.

No tablet marks the hallowed ground
Where Willie lies;
No cypress shades the grassy mound
Where Willie lies—
To us his sacred dust is dear,
And yet we say with many a tear
"Our angle baby is not here
Where Willie lies.

We have a dream of some far shore
Where Willie lies;
There sorrow enters never more
Where Willie lies—
We see him in that happy dream
Afar where burning seraphs gleam
Beyond the valley and the stream
Where Willie lies.

He sufferred and we coud not aid,
And yet 'twas best;
He pined and died, we wept and prayed,
And still 'twas best—
No storm cloud breaks in yonder skies,
No aching heart nor weeping eyes,
Safe in the Saviour's arms he lies,
And oh! 'tis best.

We wait and weep beside the spot
Where sleep our dead:
We ask the grave—it answers not,
Where are the dead?
Hope hath here hour of sweet romance,
And yet dear Lord with keener glance
Than watcher's dream or poet's trance
Beholds the dead!

—O. S. Times.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

CHAPTER VI. Continued.

'I love him papa!' she whispered, between an impulsive shower of coaxing kisses; 'and oh, please don't call him THAT man! He may be poor; but he is good, so noble—dearer, better every way than any man I ever knew. If you had only heard him talk last night, papa!'

'Talk! Yes, I dare say.' The baronet laughed—a dreary laugh enough. 'It is his stock in trade—that silvery tenor of his; and all adventurers possesses the gift of gab. It is the rubbish that keeps them afloat.'

'An adventurer, papa! You have no right to call him that. You don't know him—you should not judge him He may be poor, but proverty is his only disgrace. He does not deserve that opprobious name!'

'It would be difficult, indeed, to say what name Mr Gaston Dantree does not deserve. A penniless stranger who could deliberatly set himself to work to steal the affections of a child like you—for your fortune alone! That will do, Katherine; I know what I am talking about—I have met men like Mr. Gaston Dantree before. And I have the right to judge him—this thief who comes to steal away my treasure! Child—child! you have disappointed me more than I can say.'

He sighed bitterly, and covered his face with his hands; Katherine's arm tightened imploringly around his neck.

'But not angered you, papa, not grieved you; don't say I have done that!' She cried faintly, hiding her face. 'Dearest, best father that ever was in this world, don't say you are angry with Katherine—for the first, the only time?'

'Heaven knows, my dear, I could not be angry with you if I tried. Lift up your head, Kathie, and give me a kiss. Don't cry for your new toy, my child; you shall have it, as you have had all the rest. Only whatever happens in the future, don't blame me. Remember that I have nothing but your happiness at heart.'

Her impetuous kisses, her happy tears thanked him. Since her childhood he had not seen her weep before and the sight moved him strangely.

And when am I to see him, Katherine?' he asked; 'when is this unknown hero, without money in his purse, coming to claim the heiress of Scarswood? It requires some courage doubtless, to face the 'heavy feather;' but I suppose he does intend to come. And I think your Mr. Dantree has courage—no, that's not the word—cheek enough for anything.'

'He will be here to day,' she whispered, lifting her head; 'and, papa, for my sake don't be hard on him—don't hurt his feelings, don't insult him for his poverty!'

He put her from him and walked away with a gesture of anger.

'His poverty! as if I cared for that! The baronets of Scarswood have been poor men, often enough, but they were always gentlemen. I don't think your handsome lover with the tenor voice can say as much. But whatever he is—blackleg, adventurer, fortune-hunter—I am to take him, it seems, to give him my daughter, and heiress, as soon as it pleases his sultanship to claim her. If not, you'll become a heorine, won't you, Kathie, and run away to Gretna Green with him? Katherine, if by some freak of fortune Scarswood and its long rent-roll passed from you to-morrow, and you stood before him penniless as he is, how long do you think he would prove true to all love vows of last night, in the conservatory, was it?'

'For all the years of his life, papa,' the girl cried, her large eyes flashing, 'You don't know him—you judge him cruely and unkindly. He loves me for my self—as I do him. Papa, I never knew you to be so unkind before in all my life.'

'That will do, Kathie—I have promised to accept him when he comes—let that suffice. I confess I should have liked a gentleman born and bred for a son-in-law, but that weakness will no doubt soon wear away with time. Ah, I see—lo! the conqueringhero comes!' Will you dare trust him to my tender mercies, my dear, or do you wish to remain and do battle for your knight?'

For Mr. Gaston Dantree was riding slowly up the avenue. The sun, which all morning has been struggling with the clouds, burst out at the moment, and Mr. Dantree approached through the sunburst as through a glory. The girl's eyes lit, her whole face kindled with the radiance of love at seventeen. And then one of the gods was hers. She turned in her swift impulsive fashion, and flung her arms around her father's neck once more.

'Don't be unkind, papa, for my sake. It would kill me if I lost him—just that.'

'Kill you,' he laughed cynically, 'Menhave died, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.' There, go—I may be an ogre, but I'll promise not to devour Mr. Dantree this morning, if I can help it.'

He led her to the door, held it open for her to pass out. She gave him one last imploring glance.

'For my sake, papa,' she repeated, and fled.

He closed the door and went back to his seat beside the window. The last trace of softness died out of his face, he sighed heavily, and in the garish sunshine his florid face looked haggard and worn.

'If I only had courage to face the worst,' he thought—'if I only had courage to tell the truth. But I am a coward, and I cannot. The revelation will killher—to lose lover, fortune all at one blow. If it must fall, mine will never be the hand to strike, and yet it might be the greatest mercy after all.'

The door was flung wide.

'Mr. Dantree,' announced the footman.

Sir John arose with a stern ceremoniousness that might have abashed most men. But it did not abash Katherine's lover. In the whole course of his chequered career no man had ever seen Mr. Dantree put out of confidence. He came forword, hat in hand, that handsome mask, his face, wearing a polite smile.

'Good morning, Sir John—I hope to see you well after last night's late hours. It was a most delightful reunion.. And Miss Katherine, I trust, is well also after the fatigue of so much dancing?'

'My daughter is well!'—very stiff and frigid this response 'Will you take a seat, Mr. Dantree, and tell me to what I owe the honour of this visit?'

He paused. The tone, the look, were enough to chill the ardour of the warmest lover. Mr. Dantree tookthem and the chair as a matter of course. He laid his hat on the floor, drew of his gloves ran his fingers through his glossy black curles, and met Sir John irate gaze with unflinching good humour.

'I come to you, Sir John, on a matter of supreme importance. As you appear in haste, I will not detain you long—I will come to the point at once Last night I had the honour ofproposing for your daughter's hand, and the happiness of being accepted.'

This was coming to the point at once with a vengeance. Sir John sat gaizing at him blankly. The stupendous magnificence of his cheekness completely took his breath away.

'It may be presumptuous on my part,' Mr. Dantree went on; 'but our affections are not under our control. I love your daughter, Sir John, and have the great happiness of knowing my love is returned.'

Sir John Dangerfield actually burst out laughing. Somewhat in the old mustache there lay a larking vein of humor, and Mr. Dantree's perfect sang froid and pat little speech tickled it; and the laugh took Mr. Dantree more aback that any words in the English language.

'Sir!' he began, reddening.

'I beg your pardon, Mr. Dantree—I certainly had no intention of lauuhing, I certainly suppose you don't see anything to laugh at. It was that pretty speach of yours—how glibly you say your lesson! Long practice, now, I suppose has made you perfect.'

'Sir John Dangerfield—if you mean to insult me—'

'Keep quiet, Mr. Dantree—you're not in a passion, though you feign one very well. You may be an actor by profession, for what I know, but I'd rather you deplore melodrama and keep to humdrum common-sense. Reserve all your flowery periods about love overleaping the barriers of rank—Katherine is not listening. Am I to understand you are here to demand my daughter's hand in marriage?'

Mr. Dantree bowed.

'You are to understand, Sir John, I possess Miss Dangerfield's heart, I have come here this morning, with her consent, to ask you for her hand.'

'And my daughter has known you—three, or four weeks—which is it? And your good enough to acknowledge it may be a little presumptous! Mr Dantree, what are you? Katherine is seventeen, and in love with you; I sixty-five, and not in love; you posoess a handsome face and a very fine voice—may I ask what additional virtues and claims you can put forth for my favour? Dark eyes and melodious tenor are very good and pleasent things in their way, but I am an unromantic old soldier, and I should like you to show some more substantial reasons why I am to give you my daughter for life.'

'If by substancial reasons you mean fame or fourtune, Sir John I possess neither. I own it—I am poor. I am a journalist. By my pen I earn my bread, and I have yet to learn there is any disgrace in honest proverty.'

'There are many things you have yet to learn, I think, Mr. Dantree, but easy assurance and self-conceit are not allowed. You are poor, no doubt—of the honesty of that poverty I have no means of judging. At present I have but your word for it. Would you like to know what I think of you, Mr. Dantree—in plain language?'

'If you please, Sir John, and it will be plain, I have no doubt.'

'Then, sir, you are, I beleive, simply and solely an adventurer—a fortune hunter. Be good enough to hear me out. I am not likely to repeat this conversation for some time, and it is much better we should understand each other at once. There is but one thing I would rather not see my daughter than your wife, and that is—dead!'

'Thank you, Sir John—you are almost more complimentary than I had hoped. I am to understand then,' he said this with perfect coolness, 'that you refuse your consent. In that case I have only to bid you good-day and go.'

Sir John glanced at him in impotent rising wrath. What it cost him to preserve even a show of self-control the fiery old soldier alone knew.

'You do well,' he cried, his blue eyes afire, 'to taunt me with my impotency. If I were a wiser man and a less indulgent father, by Heavens! you should go, and that quickly! But I have never refused Katherine anything yet, and I am not going to begin now. She has set her foolish, child's heart on you, sir, with your cursed womanish beauty and Italian song-singing, and she shall not be thwarted by me. She shall marry you if she wishes it—she shall never say I came between her and the dearest desire of her heart. Take her, Gaston Dantree; he arose,' and may an old man's curse blight you if ever you make her repent it!'

Perhaps somewhere in his hard anatomy Gaston Dantree had an organ that did duty as a heart, it smote him now. He held out his hand to the passionate old soldier.

'So help me Heaven! she never shall. As I deal by her may I be dealt with!'

He spoke the words that sealed his condemnation. In the troubled after-days, it was only the retribution he invoked then that fell.

CHAPTER VII.

THE SECOND WARNING.

Before the expiration of a week, it was known to all Castleford—to all the country families in the neighborhood—that Miss Katherine Dangerfield, of Scarswood Park, was engaged to Mr. Gaston Dantree, of—nobody knows where.

Had any any other baronet's daughter so far stooped to disgrace their code and their order, the county families would have stood paralyzed at the desecration. Being Miss Dangerfield, nobody wondered. It was only a piece with all the rest. What could you expect of a young person—the term of lady would have been a mis nomer—of a young person with some of the best blood in Sussex in her veins, who persisted in scampering over the downs and the coast for miles without a groom!—who treated her venerable father as though he were a child of twelve, who wore her hair streaming down her back at the mature age of seventeen, who called every Goody and Gaffer in the parish by their christian name, who was quite capable of speaking to anybody without an introduction, who knew every game that could be played on the cards, and who talked slang? What could you expect of a demoralized young woman like this? The Dangerfield lineage was unexceptional—there must be a cross-somewhere, a bar sinister on the mother's side; it was a wild impossibility the old blood could degenerate in this way.

Who was Mr. Gaston Dantree? The county families asked the question with intense curiosity now, and found the answer all too meagre. Mr. Dantree himself responded to it with that perfect high-bred self-possession which characterized him; and everybody had to take his own account, or go look for proof,

'I am an American—a Southener, as you know,' Mr. Dantree had said; 'my native State is Lousiana. I am that famous historical personage, "the son of poor but honest parents," now and for many years dead. By profession I am a journalist; I am connected with the New Orleans P——. An unexpected windfall, in the way of a small legacy, enabled me, six months ago, to realize a long-cherished dream of mine and visit England. My leave of absence expires in two months, when I must either return to New Orleans or—'

Here Mr. Dantree was wont to break off if Miss Dangerfield were present, with a profound sigh, and glance that spoke lexicons.

Squire Talbot, of Morecambe, with whom Mr. Dantree had come down to London, and with whom he was still staying, when brought upon the stand in turn and cross-examined, could throw very little more light on his guest's antecedents.

'Deuced sorry, now, Sir John, I ever did bring the fellow down,' young Mr. Tolbot said, the first time he met the baronet, pulling his tawny moustache with gloomy ferocity; 'but how the deuce could I tell Miss Dangerfield would go and—no, I mean Dantree, be hanged to him!—would go and make love to Miss Dangerfield? I put it to yourself—how could I, Sir John? I'm deuced sorry, and all that, but I don't know a blessed thing about him except that "he's a jolly good fellow," as the song says, tells a capital story, sings like an American Sims Reeves, and can punish more champagne of a night and rise none the worse for it the next day than any fellow'—Squire Talbot pronounced it 'feller'—'I ever knew. I met him first at a dinner at the Guards' Club, then a Sunday breakfast at Lord Leaham's—invited to both these places, you understand, to sing. He knew lots of newspaper men—wrote flimsies himself for the sporting journals, and when I asked him—confound it!—to run down with me to my place in Sussex, he consented at once. And I am deuced sorry, Sir John,' reiterated Squire Talbot, going over the same ground again; 'and I hope whatever happens, you know, you'll not blame me.'

'I blame nobody,' the old baronet answered wearily; 'these things are to be, I suppose. I shall write to New Orleans and make enquiries concerning this young man; I can do no more. Katherine is infatuated—pray Heaven her eyes may not be opened in my day!'

Mrs. Vavasor was perhaps the only one who heard with unalloyed satisfaction of Katherine's sudden engagement.

'What did I tell you, Sir John?' she said, triumphantly. 'What do you think of my powers of divination now? It's rather a mesalliance, isn't it?—for her father's daughter, rather a mad affair altogether. But, dear child—she is so impulsive, and so self-reliant, and so hopelessly obsti— no, that's not a pleasant word—so resolute and firm, let us say, that remonstrance is quite thrown away upon her. Let us pity her, Sir John, rather than blame; she comes by all those admirable traits of character honestly enough—inherited from her mother. And when is the wedding to take place?'

She threw her head back against the purple-velvet cushions of her chair, and looked at the baronet with maliciously sparkling black eyes.

'I don't ask merely from idle curiosity,' Mrs. Vavasor went on, as the badgered baronet's answer was a sort of a groan; 'I enquire because the knowlege influences my own movements. One week before the day fixed for the wedding, I receive from you, my kind benefactor, that cheque for ten thousand pounds—a very respectable haul, by the way—and I shake the dust of Scarswood off my feet for ever. My reception by both host and hostess was, I must say, of the least cordial, and I am made to feel every hour that I am a most unwelcome interloper. Still, I bear no malice, and not having any of your sang-azure in my veins, my sensitive feelings are not wounded. Perhaps a dozen years spent at Baden and Homburg does not blunt the finer edge of one's nerves. I trust the wedding day will not come round too speedily—I really like my quarters here. My room commands a sunny southern prospect, your wines are unexceptional, and your cook, for an English cook, a treasure. Don't fix the happy day too near, Sir John. Dearest Katherine is so impetuous that she would be married next week, I dare say, if she could.'

'I wish to Heaven it were next week, so that I might be rid of you!' Sir John broke out. 'You bring misfortune with you wherever you go! Mrs. Harman, you shall leave this house! You sit here with that mocking smile on your face, exulting in your power, until it drives me half mad to look at you. Take the enormous bribe you demand—I have no right to give it to you, I know—and go at once. What object can you gain by remaining here?'

'Now, that is an unkind question. What do I gain? The pleasure of your society, and that of Miss Dangerfield, to be sure; the pleasure of being hand and glove with the gentry of this neighborhood, who, like yourself, rather give me the cold shoulder, by the way. I wonder how it is?—none of them ever saw me at Homburg that I know of. I suppose the brand of adventuress is stamped on my face. No, Sir John, not one hour, not one second sooner than I say, shall I quit Scarswood Park. If the wedding is fixed for next week, then I leave this; if for this day ten years, then I remain that long. I dare say I should find life slow, and the character of a respectable British matron of the upper classes a dismal life; but still, I would do it.'

He stopped in his walk and looked at her. The bold eyes met his unflinchingly.

'Well, Sir John?'

'Harriet Harman, you have some sinister design in all this. What have you to do with Katherines wedding day? What has the child done to you that you should hate her? What have I ever done that you should torment me thus? Is it that at the last hour you mean to break your promise and tell? Great Heaven! Harriet, is that what you mean?'

Her steady color faded for a moment; her own, with all her boldness, shifted away from the gaze of the old man's horror-struck eyes.

'What I mean is my own affair,' she said, sullenly; and I do hate Katherine for her mother's sake and her own. You needn't ask me any questions about it. I want money, Sir John, and that promised cheque of course—my poor little purse replenished. See how empty it is!—and all my worldly wealth is there.'

She laughed as she held it up, all her old audacious manner back. Two or three shillings jingled in the meshes as she held it out.

'I want to replenish my wardrobe; I want to pay some bills; I want—oh! millions of things! Fill me out a cheque like the princely old solier you are, and I shall get through the day shopping in Castleford; I will amuse myself spending money, while Katherine amuses herself listening to Mr. Dantree's fluent love making. He's rather a clever little fellow, that son-in-law-elect of yours, my dear baronet, and I don't think he has given us his whole autobiography quite as it is known in New Orleans. I don't say there was anything particularly clever in his wooing the heiress of Scarswood, because any well-looking young man, with a ready tongue and an elegant address, could have done that, and my own impression is that Miss Dangerfield, like Desdemona, met him more than half way. I'm ready to wager the nuptials will be consummated within the next three months. Now that cheque, dear Sir John—and do be liberal!'

She rose up, and Sir John, with the look of a hunted animal at bay, filled out a cheque for a hundred pounds and handed it to her.

'A sop to Ceberus,' the widow said, gaily. 'Do you know, Sir John, I haven't had so much money at once for the past five years? How fortunate for me that I met Colonel Dangerfield and lady that eventful day fifteen years ago in the hospital of St. Lazare! And what a comfort to a poor little widow a great man's secret is! Thank you, Sir John, my toilettes will do Scarswood credit during the remainder of my stay.'

And Mrs. Vavasor kept her word. The faded silks and shabby laces, the Palais Royal diamonds and soiled gloves were consigned to the lowest depths of oblivion in the widow's trunks. And silks of rainbow hues, stiff enough in their rustling richness to stand alone; cobweb laces of marvellous price, with the glimmer of real jewels, made the little woman gorgeous. If she painted ... mistress of the art, ... a very expert female eye could have detected the liquid rouge that made her bloom so brightly, or that the sparkling radiance of her black eyes was the ghastly brilliance of belladonna. Sir John's one hundred pounds went a very little way in his visitor's magnificent toilet, and that first "sop to Cerberus" had to be very speedily and often renewed. In her own way, she spent her time very pleasantly—lounging over purchases in the Castleford shops, making agreeable trips to London and back, driving about in a little basket-carriage and—biding her time.

'All things are possible to the man who knows how to wait, my dear Mr. Dangerfield,' she said one day to the baronet's moody nephew. 'I suppose the same rule applies to woman. Don't be impatient; your time and mine are very near now. I have waited nearly eighteen years, and here you see grumbling, ingrate, at being obliged to stand in the background for that many weeks! How is it that we never see you at Scarswood now?'

She picked up the Castleford attorney on one of her drives. Since the night of the birthday party, Mr. Peter Dangerfield had not shown his sallow face, colourless eyes and moustache inside the great house.

'I don't think you need ask that question—you, of all people,' the young man answered sulkily. 'What the deuce should I do at Scarswood, looking at those two billing and cooing? They say marriages are made in Heaven—I wonder if this union of a fool and a knave was ever made in the celestial regions? In the infernal, I should say myself.'

'My dear Mr. Dangerfield, aren't you a little severe? A fool and a knave! Would Katherine have been a fool, I wonder, if she had accepted you the other night?

> Oh, my cousin shallow-hearted,
> Oh my Kathie, mine no more.

'Don't be unreasonable, Mr. Dangerfield. You are as poor as Mr. Dantree, and—if you will pardon my telling plain truth—not quarter so good looking. And then, she is not married to him yet.'

'No, but she soon will be. It is rumoured in the town that the wedding is fixed for early January. It's of no use your talking and chaffing a fellow, Mrs. Vavasor; the wedding day will take place as sure as we sit here, and the next thing, there will be an heir to Scarswood. In the poetic language of the Orientals, your talk of the other night is all 'bosh.' It is utterly impossible that Scarswood should ever fall to me.'

Mrs. Vavasor laughed in her agreeable way.

'"Impossible" is a very big word, friend Peter—too big for my vocabulary. See here, will you give me your written promise that on the day Scarswood and its long rent-roll becomes yours you will yay me ten thousand pounds? It's a tolerable price, but not too much, considering the service I will do you.'

He looked at her darkly and in doubt.

'Mrs. Vavasor,' he said slowly, 'if that be your name—and I dont believe it is—I'm not going to commit myself to you, or anybody in the dark. I am a lawyer and won't break the law. You're a very clever little woman—so clever that for the rest of my life, I mean to have nothing whatever to to do with you. If you had a spite at anybody, I don't suppose you would stick at trifles to gratify it. But I'm not going to become accessory to you before the fact to any little plot of yours. If Scarswood ever comes to me—and I repeat it, it is impossible it ever should—it shall be by fair means, not foul.'

Mrs. Vavasor lay back among the cushions and laughed till the echoes rang. They were in the streets of Castleford, and passing pedestrians looked up and smiled from very sympathy with that merry peal.

'He thinks I am going to commit a murder! I really believe he does! No—no! Mr. Dangerfield, I'm not a lawyer, but I respect the majesty of the law quite as greatly as you do. I've done a great many queer things in my life, I don't mind owning, but I never committed a murder, and I never mean to, even to gratify spite. Come! you're a coward, mon ami, even though you are a Dangerfield; but if you promise to perpetrate no deed of darkness on the way, will you give me that ten thousand when you are lord of the manor. Yes or no?—just as you please. Sir John will, if you won't.'

'I wish I understood——'

'Wait! wait! wait! You shall understand! we are drawing near the Hall. Is it a promise?'

'I will be a fool' promise, given in the dark—but yes, if you will have it.'

Mrs. Vavasor's eyes sparkled with a light this time not derived from belladona.

A VISIT TO THE KINGSTON PENITENTIARY.

This is no doubt the largest public building in Canada. To the eye of the observer, as he approaches this great stronghold, nothing is to be seen but great massive walls, towering away above the head of the Spectator, and nothing peculiar expect the heavy clank of the ponderous iron grate, all this indicating that something precious remains within, but when we are admitted and the massive iron bars embrace each other as if never to relax their tight grasp, we feel that we are enclosed with all the demons of the land. Our eyes are opened, and instead of the huge walls we can gaze upon the place as it were upon a manufacturing metropolis. Then it is that we hear the hum of machinery, and the bustle of over seven hundred souls within the confines of one single prison. Passing along through the corridors we came first where men were busily engaged in cutting stone for building purposes, and a little farther on men were breaking the same material into small pieces, seemingly to take the place of gravel for private avenues. The guard kindly showed us into all the manufacturing departments of the penitentary.

First we came to, the tailoring establishment, where a great number of men are employed in making wearing apparral for the convicts, this consists of trowsers one half yellow and the other half brown, the same with the coat. Next in order was the boot and shoe factory, and in this we see all the modern apparatus for making boots with neatness and despatch. In the same building below these manufacturers were the cabinet shops and plaing mills. Nothing was noticed here; but we are quickly directed into a place which proved to be very interesting, and which astonished us beyond measuse. This was the machine shop and lock factory. All the locks and latches on our doors are made by convicts of the Kingston Penitentiary. The guard told us that merchants from diffierent parts of Canada came there, anded order locks to supply the whole hardware trade. From this we were taken into a large circular building, which contained all the cells for the convicts. As near as we could make out the ase of the building seemed to be shaped something similar to a waggon wheel, in the centre was a large circular court, and from this on every side branched off long halls, each containing cells The building being so arranged that the guard can see the doors of over eight hundred cells standing in the middle of the court. These are arranged one above the other for six stories, the approaches being made by means of iron stairway and iron platforms projecting out from the wall, thus leaving everything exposed to the eye of the guard.

There are also dark cells in which they put convicts who are unruly and behave indecently; not a ray of light is allowed to penetrate into theesemall dungeons, in order that the punishment may be more severe. The guard wanted us to go intill he would shut the door that we might feel what like it was, but there was something in the sight alone that would almost make a person's hair stiffen with fear, and cause their blood to chill. I know not whether it is the thoughts of the person inhabiting the cell, or a slight conception of the lower regions, is brought into a person's mind as he gazes into the dismal hole. After a minute examination of the prison room we passed through the dining hall, which is used as a chapel for worship, from this through the cooking apartment and laundry, these indicating that quite a business is done in both.

Before leaving, the guard directed our attention to a hall containg all the old men, a sight which I am sure will never be erased from the mind of either one of us. Men who have been in prison for years and years, all waiting patiently as if it were for death to take them away. All stooped as if the heavy weight of trouble was bearing them down in sorrow to the mother earth. The forlorn and dejected look of these poor old men is enough to draw out feelings of sympathy even from the most hard hearted

With this concluded the sights within the walls of the Penitentiary, and when we were out into the street once more there was a kind of imperceptible feeling of relief pervaded our minds, not from anything that happened within but from a thought which I believe must strike the mind of every visitor to the great Sing-Sing of Canada, and that is, what a terrible havoc the prisoners could make if they only started to rebel against guards and everything else, and what the results would be if it should happen just as we were in, but such a thing is not possible, for prisoners are not allowed to speak a word to one another for this reason, no plots could be devised; besides, the guards are well armed for any emergency. Sentinels pace the top of the wall which surround the Penitentiary day and night always with rifle in hand, so that every movement within is noticed by those on the watch-towers.

After all we question ourselves and ask, Is it possible that seven hundred and thirty-eight persons are in one single prison performing penal servitude for disobeying the laws of the land? Is it not enormous?

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT EXCHANGE OPEN TO THE WORLD.

To the Editor.

DEAR SIR,—As will be seen by my recent issue of the Traveller, (my own journal, which I have endeavored to make a journal of heart and a journal of soul) this movement was inaugurated for the benefit of the 40,000 "London Mutual" Members, through them for the benefit of the country at large in the East, and for the farmers of the wide, wide West. It has only been upon the strongly expressed wishes of many of my oldest and warmest friends—agency patrons and won patrons—throughout the Dominion that I have changed that idea and given a wider scope to International Wheat Exchange by opening to the world the certain benefits to be derived from it. Having done so, I have worked for the past month most incessantly to make it a sure success east and west. I have to thank the many kind friends whose kindly words have thrilled me with heart and will to work it up to the success already had. It is humming gloriously throughout the East and West across this continent.

Prominent among those friends stands your eminently successful neighbour, W. J. McFarland, Esq., whose great interest in the welfare of the farming community is fully shown by his good letter following this. To him I am much indebted for the sure success of my scheme of International Wheat Exchange which will be turned to the best account next week in Iowa.

With just such friends at home to aid it in my absence west, the movement shall not fail of good results. See advertisement next week in STANDARD and Iowa edition of Traveller, within three weeks, which will be mailed to the ratepayers generally of this and other Counties of Ontario. Meanwhile Mr. McFarland has kindly volunteered to give any desired information. Yours faithfully, CHAS. T. DOYLE, Manager International Wheat Exchange, Walkerton, Canada, and Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

MARKDALE, Ont., Oct. 17, 1881.

CHAS. T. DOYLE, ESQ.

DEAR SIR,—I am much pleased that you gave me the privilege of perusing your spicy little sheet the Traveller.

From my knowledge of the farming community of this section of country, having been engaged in purchasing and shipping wheat for the last twenty years, I feel satisfied that they want just what you propose, viz:—a change of seed.

Your scheme as fully set forth in the Traveller, is a good one, and well worthy of support. Knowing your push and business ability, I feel certain that you will succeed in your laudable endeavors in which you have my best wishes.

Yours very truly,
W. J. MCFARLAND.

CHAS. T. DOYLE, ESQ., Manager International Wheat Exchange, Walkerton Canada.

DEAR SIR,—As per your request we have with pleasure sent a circular to each of our 800 farm agents, and sent one hundred thousand (100,000) copies of our Farmers' Journal to the farmers of the North-West in which we have requested the sending to this office for you immediately, properly labelled samples of the best flouring wheats grown in the respective localities. Your plan is most commendable, and should place the wheat growers of the United States and Canada under lasting obligations to you.

Please commend the Cedar Rapids Insurance Company in your enterprise. With best wishes for your success.

Very truly yours,
J. A. PERKINS, Sec.

MEAFORD ROAD.

From a Correspondent.

Bad Roads.

Weather very uncertain.

Where is Vennor? Is he asleep or on a journey.

IMPROVEMENT OF STOCK.—Mr. Robert Buchanan while at the Toronto Exhibition, purchased three South Down lambs, one male and two females. This is a step in the right direction; will not some one else import into the neighborhood a thorough bred Bull, as there is great room for improvement in the stock of this county.

BEAT THIS WHO CAN.—Mr. W. J. Cooey has an apple tree out in bloom for third time this season. This beats the much-boasted second crop of ripe strawberries as this tree has apples from the second bloom on it now.

IMPROVEMENT IN CHURCH PROPERTY.—Through the exertions of Mr. Richard Smith, a new picket fence is being put around the graveyard at the stone church. This might serve as an example to some others in the neighborhood.

Mr. John Rowe, owing to sickness, has been obliged to postpone his trip to the North-West.

FROM BERKELEY.

The above village is situated in Holland Township, on the T. G. & B. Railway, 5 miles North of Markdale, and has the following place of business.

Hotel by Jas Allen, General store by Mr. Lund, two blacksmith shops by R. Abbey and Thos Sargent, T. Brown Waggon maker, J. Picket Section Boss, Alfred Williams Steam Saw Mill, and Berkeley P. O. By Mr Fleming.

The place has a thriving appearance.

Mr. Sargeant has erected this season a large dwelling house and Blacksmith shop, and has rented his farm to his two eldest sons.

Mr. Alfred Williams lost a horse two weeks ago, by having his foot caught on the railway switch while backing over the track after unloading a load o' lumber. The horse fell, breaking his leg.

PRICEVILLE.

From our Correspondent.

Mud! mud! mud!

The Catholic Church has a new roof.

The "O be joyful club," only meet seven nights in the week now.

Mr Beaton of Toronto, and Mr. Mc Donald of Durham, have rented John McRae's shop with the intention of carrying on the carriage business.

Geo. Simpson has had his new cottage veneered with brick. John McArthur also is veneering his new store and dwelling with brick, and things in general are having the appearance of the "hum."

The stranger in our streets might question the morality of our town, but on examining the "volcano" from whose crater is issueing forth ashes, soot and imprecations, he finds that a stovepipe is being erected.

The following is the result of monthly examination for Oct. of the Priceville Public School:—

JOHN VERT, Tp. Clerk

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION FOR COUNTY OF DUFFERIN.

To the Editor.

DEAR SIR,—In discharge of a duty imposed on me by the members, I send you the folling account, which I hope will be of interest.

I may remark, en passant, that, as we were called upon to be present at 9 a. m., Friday, 14th, to fill out a very extensive two days' programme, I took train Thursday evening, being joined, en route, by a number of others, and was pleased to see a fair sprinkling of the gentler—you know. A ride on the road was splendid exercise after our sedentary occupation, as we bumped on down. Somewhere below Shelburne we came to a bigger bump than usual, followed by a succession of bumps about three hundred yards long; but, as the ladies on the train were school marms, there was no foolish screaming. The poor old car, unable to support such a load of wit and learning, had got its hind legs off the track. General Bagatelle was on board, however, and he made things fly—one brakesman went flying into the ditch for getting in his way—he swore till the gravel flew in all directions. As we travelled on to the next jumping off place, I was rather amused at the remarks of a brakesman:—"People complain of this road going so slow, but if that was to happen on a fast road, some of them would be killed; but on this road if we do get off, we go so slow that nobody ever gets hurt." It is not a bonus they want, Mr Editor, it is a medal! But now for business.

Public School Buildings,
Orangeville, Oct. 14th, '81.

Association opened under auspices of the President, N. Gordon, Esq., P. S. I., Dufferin. He delivered a very telling address.

Minutes of last meeting read by F. B. Denton, Secretary.

Report of committee for drafting constitution. Mr. Gordon asked for more time. He would draft the By-laws, but found the Constitution was laid down by law. Constitution read by the Secretary.

Moved and seconded, that the next meeting of the Association be in May of 1882.

Moved and seconded, that the fee be 50c.; or that each member for $1 (including fee 35c) have choice of Canada School Journal or Gage's Examiner at club rates of 65c.—Carried.

Arithmetic to Beginners. — Miss Lawson. A class of juveniles brought in to be used for the occasion. One shaver thought he was had up, took a softening of the brain, and began to liquify; carefully removed by the collar. By means of the removal, Miss Lawson got through very nicely.—Shaver brought back in smiles; rain gone.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Geography to Beginners.—Mr. Kelly. Beat anything I over heard since my nativity.

How to Teach English History.—John Tait, Collingwood Collegiate institue. He would teach by epochs, cared nothing for dates, (let every boy throw up his cap). Said the Saxsons opposed the Normans more than the Danes. (Doubt it very much). He said the Tudors sounded the death knell of English History. (I think they relieved the nation somewhat, by taking the power of oppression from the barrons and the Church into their own hands). He spoke of memory as a separate faculty. (I think that memory is a developement of any faculty. But Mr. Mait is decidedly one of our best men; and a most conscientious worker. His subjects are well handled. Coming in as a free lance—and a sharp one—he makes things lively.

Essay on Elocution. by Mr. Varcoe.—Voice rather fine for the subject, Illustrations rather digressive. Mr. Steele seemed to intimate that the illustrations were to powerful for the subject matter. Still to give the—every man his due, the compositisn was ably written.

Algebra to Beginners,—Mr. Steele, B. A., Head Master Orangeville High School, made a very ingenious use of the balls to give pupills a start in this abstract subject. I could not agree with him on his illustrations for the substraction of minus quantities. He did not err for want of ability, but because he accepted the common illustrations of the books, which, if he examines carefully, he will find to be erroneous. But to elucidate this subjet would require about two columns of your paper, Mr. Steel is a really able man, as indeed his position indicates; and his other subject, Analysis and Parsing of "The Deserted Village," proves him to be thoroughly master of English.

OCT. 15TH.—Mr. Steel, as above. Mr. Tait, Senior Arithmetic. But the principal feature of the occasion were (note the use of were) the lectures of J. Lachlin Hughes, Esq., P. S. I., Toronto. That on the evening of the 14th, in the Town Hall, before an audience of five or six hundred with a large admixture of youth, was a masterly affair. The man that has magnatism and tact to manage such an audience, and hold them spell-bound for two hours, is a phenomenon. The nominal subject was School Room Humor, put there was much that was pathetic. In fact we only refrained from crying for fear we might be in an unfit condition for the next laugh. Mr. Hughes gave the Association lectures on music and on drawing, which were extremely valuable to teachers: hints gleaned from the best schools of the United States, Kindergarten and other systems, and combined by himself, a no mean Artist. Mr. Hughes is one of the best of fellows (if I may use such a free expression, and I know he will take no offence at it) that I ever met; he is a man in every good sense of the word; and to know him is to know you have a brother.

Your obt. servant,
I. H. PALMER.

EUHRASIA AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S PLOUGHING MATCH.

The ploughing match of the above named Society took place on the farm of Mr. N. Clark, on the 25th ult. The day proved to be splendid, and we had the best ploughing match ever held in Euphrasia. It was a beautiful sight to see 18 teams of horses with the best of ploughs of different colors, start up the field, though I believe it is pleasanter to be a looker-on than a ploughman in Euphrasia. Although Mr. Clark carried out food enough to satisfy any ploughman, and they are proverbial for being big eaters, still the on-lookers had the advantage, for we went into the house and had a good and substantial hot dinner, then when the ploughing was done, all hands in and eat again. If you are spared for another year, and I hope you will be, come out to this end of the County, spend a week at the ploughing matches, and get fat. Many thanks to Mr. Clark for his hospitality, nor do we wish to forget the female portion of the family for their kindness

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor.

SIR,—Dundalk is under obligations to you for giving us so readable a paper. It is quite a credit to us as well as to our village. I see that you encourage the expression of opinion on public matters by your subscribers. Church affairs are the order of the day at present in your columns. I have been thinking that Dundalk might have a share in helping to elucidate some of the questions discussed and write you with this in view. I have got the numbers of the STANDARD which include the correspondence, and must say that Dundalk will need to waken up if she desires to keep in line. "As iron sharpeneth iron," so let us assist in rubbing each other up. Your correspondent "M" hits the nail on the head very effectively in his strictures on Church practice as contrasted with Scriptural theory. There can be no doubt whatever but churches in many instances are falling into most disreputable ways, as to self-support. "M" points out such ways and shows wherein they are of easy avoidance in a religious sense. Get a deeper religious feeling to pervade the mind, and this trouble would be over come. If ministers, instead of pandering to the worldly propensities of their people as to money raising ways, would sternly set their faces against all dubious methods, half the battle would be won, and then the other half would not be so very hard to achieve, by a resolute, consistent teaching of the great gospel truths in harmony with their practice. Nothing has pleased me better in the letters of "M" than his evident faith in the church to come back to her first love. He does not pick out her faults for the sake of fault-finding, but he deals with the matter as if it can be cured and as if she had (as she really has) the means within herself to do so. This is the criticism of a friend, not that of an enemy. I will just refer shortly to some of his opponents. There is no doubt but there are a considerable number of well-meaning men who would support some such scheme as the test tax of Taxarious for a variety of apparently defensible reasons, but on coming across such and discussing the matter, they have generally seen their grounds to be untenable. The truth is the spirit of the age is totally against the Church as a body, mixing itself up in any way with political or legal questions, and there can be no doubt that this spirit in the present state of the world is quite in accord with the spirit of the church's lawgiver, and this can be admitted even by those who contend that it is not the duty of the Church to exercise an influence for good on every question pertaining to social well being. Taxarious says "tax the adjuncts, but leave the Gospel free. I would rather put it this way, "a free gospel in free adjuncts." "No tax, no force, no debt." Your correspondent Subscriber is justifiably sarcastic on the church, sometimes piling up the debt, and then using any and every means to clear it off. Fair Play makes a sharp point in recommending whiskey Treasurers, as it will be clear to all that if the vendors of whiskey may be church members, why not employ them in active work? I hardly think that Tammas Tickle is quite so ignorant as he seems. Tammas and Tibbie are evidently relations of the innocents abroad, but there is also some sense at the bottom of their nonsense. Altogether the discussion of such matters is calculated to make your paper both readable and useful, and I trust you will long go on and build up a paper creditable to yourself and the locality in which it circulates.

AN EGREMONT FARMER KILLED ON THE RAILWAY.

A sad and fatal accident occurred on the line of the G. B. & W. Ry. about seven o'clock on Monday evening, whereby Mr. James Hunt, farmer of the township of Egremont, lost his life. He had been in Mount Forest during the day transacting business, and was proceeding homeward along the line when the gravel train backing up ran over him, completely severing both legs and one arm. The body was otherwise terribly mutilated, and was almost unrecognizable. The night was exceedingly dark, and it is supposed prevented him from observing the train aproaching.—Chronicle.

A TERRIBLE FALL.

A YOUNG MAN AT KINGSTON FALLS FROM A SCAFFOLD SEVENTY HIGH.

KINGSTON, Ont., Oct. 26.—This morning a young man named Criditord, an apprentice to Mr. E. Tossel, the contractor for the mason work on the new cotton factory, ascended to the top of the tower to resume work. He had not been there long until he was precipitated down through the scaffolding, striking on the bottom with a dull thud. He was picked up in an apparently lifeless condition. Doctors were speedily summoned. He fell a distance of seventy feet. He was taken to his home at the Grand Trunk depot. But a short time ago another man died from injuries received by a falling brick at the same factory.

LATER.—The young man injured at the cotton mill has been taken to the hospital. After falling seventy feet he struck on his hands and face. His wrists were dislocated and both forearms broken. His face struck several sharp stones, which penetrated the flesh. Both upper and lower jaws were smashed into numberless pieces. It is said that after striking the ground he rebounded several times. The doctors say he cannot live. He is aged 17. The cold air caused him to dance around to keep his feet warm. His heel struck a small piece of brick, which overbalanced him and he went down through an open space in the scaffold.

On Sunday last, a Credit Valley passenger train left the Union Station, Toronto, at noon, for Chicago. It is intended to continue to run this train every Sabbath. This malicious breaking of one of the commandments should at once be stopped by the authorities. The voice of every christian in Ontario should be raised against it. Every mechanic, artizan, and labourer should protest against it, for to them it means the taking away and wiping out of their day of rest. If we allow this to proceed, we may bid good bye to the peace and quite of the Lord's day.—Orangeville Gazette.

The assessment of Toronto for 1882 has just been completed, showing a gross total of $55,296,089, or an increase of $2,136,069, over the assessment for 1881. The increase is gratifying, and is principally due to new buildings and the opening of new streets.

At a special meeting of Glenelg Council, held at the Town Hall the 19th ult., the following persons were appointed collectors for the present year, viz., Ward No. 1 Mr. Robert Moffat, No. 2 W. Arrowsmith, No. 3, and 4 Thos. Cook.

No article ever attained such unbounded popularity in so short a time as Burdock Blood Bitters, and that too during the existence of countless numbers of widely advertised bitters and blood purifiers. It is evident that this medicine begins its work at once, and leaves no desirable effect unattained.

The question is often asked, will our village continue to grow as it has done this year. $19,000 have been expended this season in building, giving employment to a large number of hands and making room for twelve familie's besides many business places, and yet there are several families in need of dwellings amongst us, and they can not be had for love or money.

THE CAUSES OF COLDS.

Are getting overheated in hot rooms or crowded assemblies, sitting in a draught, or cooling too rapidly after exercise, muffling up warm and changing to lighter wrappings, cold and damp feet. No matter what is the cause Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam is the cure for all throat and lung dicease that induce consumption.

Our esteemed townsman Mr. D. J. Shannahan, is making preparations for building next summer on his lot adjoining the Revere House. He has already purchased 25,000 brick, about one fourth of what he will require, and will have the most extensive carriage works in the county. He has just got in the wood work for 50 wheele'd rigs for the coming reason.

HAGYARD'S YELLOW OIL.

Will be found invaluable for all purposes of a family liniment. Immediate relief will follow its use in all cases of pain in the stomach, bowels or side, rheumatism, colic, colds, sprains and bruises. For internal and external use. It has no equal in the world for what it has been recommended. For sale by all dealers at 25cts per bottle.

The "Boys" seemed to have had a "High old time" on Hallow e'en. As long as they confine themselves to a little fun we would have nothing to say; but when it comes to destroying property and daubing places over with paint it is time it were put a stop to by bringing some of the perpetrators before Squire Brown. It appears the girls thought they should have a share of the fun also, and several of them amused themselves by spattering mud on peoples front doors, and unroofing chicken coops.

A LIVELY AFTERPIECE AT A CIRCUS.—At Cartersville, Ga., after the performance of the circus on the night of the 25th ult, a difficulty occurred between the circus men, the deputy marshal and others. A negro was shot at and killed and others on both sides were badly beaten and bruised. Two circus men were shot. Whiskey caused the trouble. A lion and bear escaped from their cages during the melle; the bear was killed, but the lion is still at large, and considerable excitement prevails.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage etc., resulting from excesses.

☞Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts., or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines of the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

RAILWAY MATTERS.

From the Durham Chronicle.

At the request of a number of ratepayers the Mayor called a public meeting in the town hall, on Monday evening, to discuss the railway situation. About forty ratepayers assembled. The Mayor was called to the chair, and Mr. J. F. Mowat appointed Secretary. The chairman briefly explained the objects of the meeting, as he understood it, and called upon Mr. J. H. Hunter, M.P.P., as one of the instigators of the meeting to make some remarks.

Mr. Hunter said the object of the meeting was to learn the true state of the railway. The ratepayers were entitled to explanations as to the cause of the delay in completing the road, and expressed surprise that none of the directors were present. The delays were inexplicable to the general public. Before proceeding, however, he desired to correct any misapprehension in reference to the object of the meeting, it was not, he said, for the purpose of expressing indignation, but simply for the purpose of devising some means to assist the directors, and get some information, if possible, as to when we were likely to get regular trains. Some of the directors approved of the meeting. The meeting was certainly not for the purpose of censuring the directors, but simply as he said before to get information. The ballasting was to have been completed on the 1st September, then on the 15th and now people in Mount Forest state that the road will not be opened this winter. If he thought this was true he would close his storehouse at once. If the road was not going to be opened the people should know it. A deputation should be appointed to wait on the directors and urge upon them the necessity of getting the station grounds and approaches put in decent shape. The directors would no doubt pay attention to the requests of this meeting. Mr. Jackson had stated to him that evening that railway matters were in a very unsatisfactory state, this being the case we should know the nature of the trouble. It would be a serious matter indeed for the town if the road was not speedily opened, people were getting very anxious about the matter and were desirous of assisting the directors in every possible way. He then read an interesting paragraph from the Hannover post in which sympathy was extended and assistance proffered. Nobody appears to know, he said, how much ballasting yet remains to be done, some say half a mile, others a mile and a half, and so on.

Mr. T. A. Harris stated there were three miles yet to be done, passed over [illegible] on Friday last. He had got [illegible] information from train hands. He would, however, suggest that a couple [illegible] gentlemen be appointed by this [illegible] to go over the line to-morrow [illegible] learn the true state of affair and report to a meeting to-morrow evening.

Mr. Hunter said the company had an engineer and if he was not doing his duty he should be compelled to do so. In conclusion he would repeat that the [illegible] was not for the purpose of [illegible] but to help. He hoped the [illegible] would lose no time in improving [illegible] station grounds. It would [illegible] for hotel busses and other vehicles to reach the station. The [illegible] road would not be [illegible] principally eminated [illegible] Mount [illegible] and it must be [illegible] the contractor, solicitor, [illegible] one of the most [illegible] there, which gave [illegible] to these reports.

Mr. [illegible] Woodland, sr., thought [illegible] of Durham were entitled to [illegible] in reference to matters [illegible] with the railway, as [illegible] liberally with the con[illegible] in town were [illegible] up and it was no wonder [illegible] getting impatient.

Mr. [illegible] only director present [illegible] that the contract was to [illegible] by 1st September, [illegible] extended to 15th [illegible] Mount Forest and Hanover [illegible] they should be treated with contempt. He was satisfied the Mount Forest directors were anxious to have the road completed. The delay was no doubt annoying, but he did not think there was any help for it. The directors had nothing to hide.

Mr. M[illegible] asked why the job [illegible] had not been let at the [illegible] advertised.

Mr. Parker replied that the tenders [illegible] exceeded the estimate, and the [illegible] deferred as it was thought [illegible] the Grand Trunk would attend to the matter.

Mr. N. McIntyre said that Mr. De[illegible] and himself had now the contract and were about to proceed with the work.

Mr. Hunter said our position was certainly a very humiliating one, it just [illegible] to him as if Mr. Newman was allowed to do as he liked and the directors were afraid to tell him, here, finish your work or we will relieve you of the job. Mr. N. was not allowed to trifle with his other contracts, but he could do as he liked with this road. The contractor was master of the situation. The company were now paying the various watchmen at the crossings and the job at the station would cost a considerable more now than if it had been let in good weather. The only reason he had heard for the delay in the ballasting was that Newman's men had all got drunk at the Mount Forest Fair. Probably they had not got sober yet. The contracter had broken his contract and should be looked after. He understood also, that the Government subsidy granted to the road between Durham and Mt. Forest had not yet been got, he did not know how this was but would see into the matter if the directors wished him to do so. The subsidy on the other line had been received right up to Chesly.

Mr. Burnet said he had told people that day that he could not buy more grain as he could not get it removed, and he felt very much humiliated at being compelled to tell them so. It was in the interest of the town that the road should be completed at once.

Mr. Woodland said they were very busy now fixing the farm crossings but in the summer when they were needed the farmers could not get them attended to.

Mr. Parker said it was very easy to find fault. The directors had worked hard, and if they had failed in getting the road completed earlier it was not their fault.

Mr. N. McKechine said that as Mr. Hunter had tendered his best service he would suggest that Mr. H. and Mr. Woodland should go over the road and report.

Mr. Hunter said he was going to Toronto in the morning and would make it a point to ascertain how much work there was yet to be done.

It was then moved by Joshua Woodland, sr., seconded by Jos. F. Mowat:—That the interests of this town are seriously prejudiced by the railway remaining incomplete and it is the opinion of this meeting that no longer time should be allowed the contractor to complete the work than the 10th of Nov., and that the Board of Directors should be requested to notify the contractor that the work will be re-let unless completed by that time, and that a committee consiting of Messrs. Middaugh, D. Jackson and James Burnet be appointed to present this resolution to the President to-morrow and urge upon him the necessity of giving this resolution effect."—Carried.

At this juncture of the proceedings one of the railway conductors informed the meeting that it was expected the ballasting would be completed this week. The meeting then broke up.

ALMOST YOUNG AGAIN.

My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy inactive condition of the whole system; headache nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family." A lady in Providence, R. I.—Journal.

TRUST THE LITTLE ONES.

I call to mind to families that have grown up within my knowledge—two homes presided over by parents who were anxious to do right, and to rear their children to do right. In one of those homes the lock and key were put upon every door behind which cake, tart and sweetmeats were stored, and upon every drawer containing curiosities or trinckets. The good mother and sternly just father meant well—they meant to remove temptation from the path of their children—but what was the result? As the children came to the age of reflection, they were forcibly reminded of the fact that they were not trusted. If they were not trusted by their own parents who knew them well, of course they were not worthy of trust. They naturally accepted the situation; but just as naturally, their wits found work in circumventing the keepers of the hiden treasures. Fruit or pastry, accidently left exposed, was sure to disappear. If the culprit was found, he was punished. By and by the eldest of the children found false keys to fit the locks of the closet doors; and so it came to pass that systematic theiving became the order of the day.

In the other home, with the same number of children, nothing that could possibly excite the normal desire of a child was ever locked up or hidden.—From cellar to garret, all storing places of fruit, pastry and sweetmeats, were open and free. One of the very first ideas impressed upon the minds of the children was, that they were worthy of trust. And they were trusted. No false desires or appetites were created by concealing from them good and pleasant things. And so, being trusted, they grew up trustworthy; and the good mother of that household would as soon of thought of finding her child cutting its own fingers off as finding it using those fingures in stealing.

And who shall say how much of this early education is carried into the after-life, for weal or woe? Far more I believe than is generally considered.

There is a vast difference between needlessly setting temptation before the little ones, and a generous hearty trusting of them. And, again, there are exceptions to nearly all rules. I know a child with eyes so weak, and lungs so painfully sensitive, that he cannot bear the sunlight or the fresh air. Yet we believe sunlight and fresh air to be generally good for children — Kleptomania is not the normal condition of our little ones. If, perchance an unlucky urchin is discovered to be absolutely afflicted with that pilfering disease, let the remedy of restraint be applied; but, in the name of love and mercy, do not administer the medicine to the dear child that is healthful,—it may be as dangerous as it is unjust. The first duty of a parent is to give and accept perfect truthfulness on the part of the children. It establishes self respect, and begets that proper sense of responsibility which carries with it perfect honesty in life. Trust is like faith; it awakens sincerity, and produces inward promptings which are but the reflections of an upright conscience.

HOW TO PRESERVE FAILING EYESIGHT.

The Magazine of Pharmacy gives the following rules for the treatment of the eyes for those who find their eyesight beginning to fail:

Sit in such a position as will allow the light to fall obliquely over the shoulder upon the page or sewing. Do not use the eyes for such purposes by any artificial light. Avoid the special use of the eyes in the morning before breakfast. Rest them while reading or sewing, or looking at small objects, and by looking at things at a distance or up to the sky; relief is immediately felt by so doing.

Never pick any collected matter from the eye lashes or corner of the eyes with the finger nails; rather moisten it with saliva and rub it away withe ball of the finger over the closed eye lids towards the nose; this carries off any excess of water into the nose itself by means of the little canal which leads into the nostril from each inner corner of the eye.

Keep the feet always dry and warm, so as to draw any excess of blood from the other end of the body. Use eye glasses at first carried in the vest pocket attached to a guard, for they are instantly adjusted to the eye with very little trouble whereas, if common spectacles are used, such a process is required to get them ready that to save trouble the eyes are often strained to answer a purpose.

Wash the eyes abundantly every morning. If cold water is used, let it be flapped against the closed eyes with the fingers, not striking hard against the balls of the eyes. The moment the eyes feel tired, the very moment you feel conscious of an effort to read or sew, lay aside the book or needle, and take a walk for an hour, or employ yourself in some active exercise not requiring the close use of the eyes.

DESERVING OF PRAISE.

Too much cannot be expressed in favor of that unsurpassed remedy for coughs, colds, asthma, croup, sore throat, and all lung complaints. If you suffer from neglected colds, try Haggyar's Pectoral Balsam. The cost is trifling, only 25 cents.

STAND FAST.

Brother! stand fast, when envious shafts
In malice steeped, fly swift around;
Standfast! in strength of duty done,
For evil weapons all rebound.

Stand fast! when falsehood rears its crest,
And poses as a spirit of light;
Stand fast! when Satan's willing tool,
Tries hard to crush the from its sight.

Stand fast! for all will be in vain,
As long as to thyself thou'rt true;
Stand fast! for malice, spite and spleen,
Go home to roost, but not with you.

Stand fast! while all these feelings writhe,
Proclaiming only sense of duty;
Stand fast! while base hypocrcity,
Grasps at your ruin for public booty.

Stand fast! be true, self-cent'ring, bear,
Your duty do, as always done;
Stand fast! and malice, spite and spleen,
Like coward sneaks, will sneak alone.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

'You will give me that promise in writing?'

'In anything; it is easy enough to give a promise we never expect to be called upon to fulfil. If through you Scarswood Park becomes mine, I will willingly pay you the sum you ask.'

'Very well, then—it is a compact between us. You fetch the document in writing the next time you visit us, and let that visit be soon. You can surely bear the sight of our lovers' raptures with the secret knowledge that they will never end in wedlock.'

'If I thought that,' between his set teeth.

'You may think it. I know that of Katherine Dangerfield which would deter anyone from marrying her. Ah! Speak of his Satanic Majesty and he appears. Behold Katherine Dangerfield and the handsome lover her money has bought!'

They came dashing out from under the arched entrance gates, both superbly mounted, for Mr. Dantree had the run of the Morecambe stables. Remarkably handsome at all times, Mr. Dantree invariably looked his best on horseback, and Miss Dangerfield, in her tight-fitting habit, her tall hat with its sweeping purple plumes, and wearing, oh, such an infinitely happy face, was, if not handsome, at least dashing and bright enough for the goddess Diana herself.

'Look,' Mrs. Vavasor said, maliciously; 'and they say perfect bliss is not of the lower world. Let those who say so come and look at Katherine Dangerfield and that beautiful creature, Gaston Dantree—the very handsomest man I ever saw, I believe, and I have seen some handsome men in my lifetime. Real Oriental eyes, Mr. Dangerfield—long, black, lustrous. And he bows with the grace of a prince of the blood.'

The equestrians swept by. Mr. Dantree doffed his hat, and bowed low to the smiling little lady in the basket carriage. Miss Dangerfield's salute was of the haughtiest. Some feminine instinct told her that her father's guest was her enemy, despite her ceaseless smiles.

'I hate that woman, papa!' Katherine more than once burst out to her father. 'I hate people who go through life continually smirking. If you told her black was white, she would say, "So it is is, my sweetest pet," and look as if she believed it—little hypocrite! I detest her, and she detests me, and she makes you miserable—oh, I can see it! Now, what I want to know is, what's she doing here?'

And Katherine stood before her father, and looked for an answer, with her bright, clear eyes fixed full upon him. He had shifted under the gaze of those frank eyes, with a sort of suppressed groan.

'I wish you would try and be civiller than you do, Kathie,' he answered, avoiding his daughter's searching glance; 'you were perfectly rude to her last night. It is not like you, Kathie, to be discourteous to the guest that eats of your bread and salt.'

'And it is very like her to play eavesdropper. I caught her behind a tall orange tree listening to every word Gaston and I were saying. I merely told her I would repeat our conversation any night for her benefit if she was so determined to hear it as to play the spy. She is an odious little wretch, papa, if she is your friend, and I don't believe she is. She paints and tells polite lies every hour of the day, and she hates me with the whole strength of her venomous little soul. And she looks at you and speaks to you in a way I don't understand—as though she had you in her power. Papa, I warn you! You'll come to grief if you keep any secret from me.'

'Katherine, for pity's sake, go and leave me alone. I in her power! What abominable nonsense you talk. Go! walk, drive, sing, amuse yourself with your new toy—the singing man—anything, only leave me to read my Times in peace. I begin to believe Victor Hugo's words. "Men are woman's playthings, and women are the dev—"'

'That will do, papa,' interrupted Katherine, walking away in offended dignity. 'You can say things quite bitter enough yourself, without quoting that cynical Frenchman. Mrs. Vavasor may be Satan's plaything, for what I know. Of that you are naturally the best judge. How long is she to force herself upon us in this house?'

'I don't know. She will leave before you are—married'—the word seemed to choke him—'and Kathie, child, I do wish you would try and treat her with common civility—for my sake, if not for hers.'

'And why for your sake, papa? I hate doing things in the dark. What claim has she upon you that I should become hypocrite and treat her civilly?'

'The claim of—of acquaintance in the past, of being my guest in the present. And without any other reason, you might do it because I desire it, Katherine.'

'I would do a good deal to oblige you, papa; even to—well, even to being civil to that painted, little, soft-spoken, snake-eyed woman. She has eyes precisely like a snake, and is to be trusted just as far. Papa, what is it she knows about my mother?'

'Your mother! What do you mean?'

'Just this—that she has some secret in her possession which you are afraid she will tell, and the secret concerns my mother. She is trading on that secret by forcing herself into this house, for you dislike her as much as I do, Sir John Dangerfield, only you won't own it. I am to be kept in the dark, it seems. Very well! I don't want to pry into your mysteries, only you can't expect me to shut my eyes to what goes on before them. That woman has some secret which you are afraid she will tell, and you pay her large sums for keeping it, and that secret concerns my mother. Don't look so thunderstruck, papa! I won't turn amateur detective, and try to find it out, and I will be as civil as it is in human nature—such human nature as mine—to be, only don't try to pass off that creature as an old friend or anything of that sort. And get her out of this house as soon as you can, for all our sakes.'

And, when Miss Dangerfield walked out of the room in offended majesty, Sir John was left to enjoy his Times as best he might after learning his sharp-eyed daughter's discovery.

Katherine turned in her saddle now and looked after the pony phaeton and its occupant.

'How I do dislike that woman, Gaston!' she exclaimed.

'And you're an uncommonly good hater, ma belle,' Mr. Dantree answered, coolly. 'You can love, but you can hate also. In the blissful days to come, when I am your lawful lord and master, it shall be my Christian endeavor to teach you better morality. I know several people whose enmity I should prefer to yours.'

'I could never be an enemy of yours, Gaston—never! Do what you might, I never could hate those whom I once loved. My likes and dislikes come at first sight. I detested that woman from the moment I set eyes on her.'

'Feminine instinct, I suppose. There is no love lost between you, darling. I've caught her looking at you at times when she thought no one was watching her, and—well, it wasn't a pleasant look, either, to give or receive. She smiles a great deal, but it isn't a very mirthful smile, and she's the sort of woman to present you a dose of strychnine and a kiss together. What does she do at Scarswood? An old friend of his, I think Sir John said. He didn't look at her in a very friendly manner, by the bye, as he said it. She is a most unwelcome intruder, it is easy to be seen, to Sir John as well as to you. Why, then, does he not give her the conge!'

'Ah, why, indeed,' Katherine repeated, with a frown; 'I wish some one would tell me why. There is some secret understanding between them that I can't fathom. I have not the slightest doubt of that. But granting that such is the case, what can be its nature?' Of course one can surmise many things and yet remain far from the truth. What am I to think of my father? I am unwilling to believe him guilty of any heinous crime. I wonder if papa ever committed a murder, or a forgery, or some interesting crime of that sort, and that this little human cat has found it out, and holds the secret like the sword of Dam—what's-his-name—suspended over his head by a single hair. I wish I could only find out for certain all about it. That accomplished, all would be right. It would be like the plot of a modern novel.'

'Like the plot of a modern novel, perhaps, but not in the least like Sir John Dangerfield. Still I think you're right, Kathie; there is a secret understanding, and if that understanding relates to a crime, I don't believe Sir John ever committed it. The dear old dad doesn't over and above like me, my darling; still he's a game old bird, and never did mortal man or woman willful wrong in his life, I'm positive. Doesn't our florid little widow often allude in an odd sort of way to your mother, Kathie? Now it strikes me the secret—for there is one—involves her.'

'I think it is very likely, indeed,' repeated Katherine, 'and I told papa so only yesterday.'

'You did! And what did he say?'

'Nothing satisfactory—only lost his temper—a chronic loss with him since Mrs. Vavasor's advent. He used to be the dearest old love, but he's become completely demoralized since that woman's been in the house. She always talks as if she had been an intimate friend of my mother, and papa fidgets and winces, and turns red and pale by turns, and never says a word. Mysteries may be very interesting,' said Miss Dangerfield with a frown, 'but I'd rather have them neatly bound in cloth than live in the house with them. One comfort is she is going to leave Scarswood before—'

Katherine blushed, and laughed, and broke off,

'Well, ma belle, before when?'

'Before—oh, well, before we are married. Now, Gaston—on the public road, sir, don't! It's all very well to know that the sins of the father shall be visited on the chilren, and all that, but it's nowhere in the catechism, that the inconvenient friendship of the mother shall, and I devoutly wish our visitor in Joppa. I never saw my mother that I can recollect. I never heard papa speak much about her, and everybody tells me I don't look like papa either—Colonel and the late Mrs. Dangerfield were both handsome. No, I don't want a compliment—not even your eyes, Gaston, can make me out no other than sallow and plain. And,' with a little droop of the head, and a little falter of the young voice, 'I never wished in all my life as I have wished to be beautiful since—I have known you.'

'My dearest Kathie,' Mr. Dantree said, politely struggling with a yawn, 'for a very sensible girl, as girls go, you can talk precious nonsense sometimes. Sallow and plain! I confess I should never have found it out if you had not told. You don't want to be cast in the mould of the stereotype British young lady, I hope, with a face like a pink and white wax doll, and a head more hollow. I can only say if you had you would never have bewitched me.'

'Gaston,' Miss Dangerfield said, 'do you know what they say in Castleford—what Mrs. Vavasor says about you?'

'Not at present,' answered Mr. Dantree, with his customary imperturbable sangfroid, 'nothing good though, I'm quite certain.'

'They say—it is almost an insult to you to repeat it—that it is not Katherine Dangerfield you love, but the heiress of Scarswood.'

She looked up to see some outburst of indignation—to hear an indignant denial. But Mr. Dantree only smiled benignly.

'You don't think that is news to me do you, Kathie? Of course, they think—why shouldn't they—I would myself in their place. My dear child, you are seventeen and haven't seen much of life—I'm seven and twenty and have seen it in all its phases. And I tell you no poor man, such as I am, ever married a wealthy wife yet, that the same wasn't said. He may love her with the passion of a second Romeo—it will make no difference. She is rich, he is poor, and it naturally follows he must be a mere mercenery fortune hunter. There were people in Lyons, perhaps, who said Claude Melonette only wanted Pauline for her fortune, until he proved his disinterestedness. Of course they say I'm a fortune hunter and adventurer—I would be very greatly surprised if they did not. Your father thinks so. But you—Kathie—my darling'—he bent his pathetic liquid dark eyes upon her, 'you surely do not; if you do—then here—this moment bid me go, and I will.

'Gaston—what nonsense. If I believed, would I be at your side now? I should die if I doubted you.'

'Mr. Dantree laughed a little cynically.

No, you wouldn't die, Kathie. Broken hearts went out of fashion with Paul and Virginia and our great grandmother. You'd not die, Kathie—you'd forget me in six months for—for what you could easily find—a better man.'

Mr. Dantree was right. It would have been very easy to find a better man; but Katherine Dangerfield was seventeen, and the glamour of a melodious voice, of Sparish eyes, and a face like some Rembrandt picture was upon her and her whole heart was in the words.

'I would never forget. When I forget you—true or false—I shall have forgotten all things earthly.

Something in her tone, in her eyes, moved him. He lifted one of her hands and kissed it.

'I am not half worthy such love and trust as yours. I am a villain, Kathie—not fit to kiss the hem of your garment. My life has been one long round of > "Reckless days and reckless nights—

> Unholy songs and tipsy fights."

But I will try—I will—to make you happy when you are my wife. And the sooner that day comes the better. Miss Dangerfield,' resuming his customary tone, 'are you aware it is going to rain?'

It had been a fitful October day—now sun gleams, now gray gloom. Katherine looked up at the sky, and one great drop and then another fell upon her face. The whole sky was dark and drifting clouds. And growing each instant darker. The storm which had been brewing all day was close upon them.

'And we are five miles from Scarswood, and in five minutes the rain will decend in torrents. Gaston, what shall we do? I had rather not get drenched; papa will scold.'

'And I had rather not get drenched even without a papa to scold. Drenching includes influenza, watery eyes, and a tendency to talk through one's nose, and is not an interesting complaint. Can't we run to cover somewhere? You know everybody in this neighbourhood. There's Major Marchmont's younder— arn't those the ivied turrets of Marchmont place I behold through the trees?'

'Y-e-s.'

'My dear, I understood your hesitation. The gallant major did his best to snub me the other day, but I'm of a forgiving turn and don't much mind. I think I could endure that old officer's grim looks more easily than the raging elements on the open downs. Shall we make for Marchmont?'

'No,' said Katherine; 'if you can endure Major Marchmont's insults, I can't. We can do better that that—we can go to Bracken Hollow,'

'With all my heart. Where is Bracken Hollow?'

'Not a quarter of a mile off. This way, Gaston, or we shall get the drenching after all. The place belong to my old nurse—she came with us from India, and papa gave her the the place to end her days in, and to get rid of her; she and Minon, my maid, led a perfect cat-and-dog life. Quick, Gaston! Good gracious, what a deluge!'

The rain was falling in torrents now. Ilderim fairly flew before it—and Mr. Dantree followed his leader. They were close to the coast; far away the white foaming sea heaved its dull booming on the shore mingled with the rush of the rain.

'Here we are!' Katherine cried; 'and we have got the drenching after all.'

And when Gaston Dantree looked up and beheld Bracken Hollow.

A long, low, black-looking hollow, close to the shore, the brake or bracken growing thick and high all round, and tall elms shutting it in. An eerie spot with the eternal thunder of the sea close down below the cliffs; a lonely spot, with no other habitation near.

Gaston Dantree was in no way a superstitious or imaginative man, but now as he looked, that chill, creeping feeling stole over him—that irrepressible shudder which makes people say, 'some one is walking over my grave,' thrilled through him.

'A ghastly place enough, Kathie,' he said, leaping off his horse; 'a murder might be committed here and no one be the wiser.'

'A murder once was committed there,' Katherine answered; 'a terrible murder. A young girl, one older than I am, sot her false lover dead under these funeral elms. They took her, tried her, condemned her, hung her, and they say those ghostly lovers keep tryst here still.'

Gaston Dantree still stood by his horse, looking with extreme disfavour at the black cottage, at the black trees.

'A horrible story, and a horrible place. I don't know why, but if youll believe me, Kathie, I feel afraid to enter that house. I'm not a coward in a general way, and once, out West, slept a whole night in a room with a dead man, a fellow who had cut his own throat, without feeling any particular qualms about it; but I'll be hanged if I want to stop here. If I believed in presentiments now, or if there were such things, I should say some awful fate was going to befall me at Bracken Hollow.'

'Gaston, don't be a goose, and don't be German and metapycical. Some awful fate will over take you at Bracken Hollow, and that speedily if you don't come in out of the rain—an attack of inflammatory rheumatism.'

She skurried with uplifted skirts into the low porch, and her lover slowly followed.

Katherine knocked loudly and imperatively at the door.

'She's deaf, poor soul,' she said. 'It's the only one of her faculties, except her teeth, that she has lost, Are one's teeth one's faculties, Gaston?'

'Yes, my dear, and extremely important about dinner time. I can't say I envy your ex-nurse the cheerful spot in which she is spending the lively remainder of her days. Ah the door opens. Now for the presiding which of Bracken Hollow. Bracken Hollow—there's something ghostly and gloomy in the very name.'

A tall old woman, hale and erect, with iron-gray hair and preternaturally, bright eyes, held open the doorand looked stolidly at her two visitors,

'How do, Hannah? Get out of the way, you hospitable old soul, and let us in. You needn't mind if you're not dressed for company—considering the weather we won't be fastidious. any port in a storm you know. This is Mr. Gaston Dantree, Hannah. You've heard of him, I dare say.'

Old Hannah reared herself a little moro upright, and transfixed the Louisianian with her brilliant little eyes.

'I've heard of Mr. Gaston Dantree—yes, Miss Katherine, and I'm glad you brought him to see me.'

'You don't seem to be very cordial about it then; you don't say you're glad to see him.'

'I'm not a fine lady, Miss Katherine—I don't tell polite lies. I'm not glad. You're going to marry him they say—is it true?'

'Well, yes,' Katherine laughed good naturedly, 'I'm afraid it is. You pity him, nursey, don't you? You took care of me a decade of years or so, and you know what he has to expect.'

'I pity you!' old Hannah answered with a second solemn prolonged stare at her nursling's lover; 'I pity you! Only seventeen, and trouble, trouble, trouble before you.'

It was not an easy matter to stare Mr. Gaston Dantree out of countance as a general thing, but his eyes fell now before old Hannah's basilisk gaze.

'Confound the hag!' he muttered, turning to the window; 'what does she mean?'

Katherine was fond of her old nurse—too fond to be irritated now by her croaking.

'Don't be disagreeable, Hannah,' she said; 'and don't stare in that Gorgon-like way. It's rude, and Mr. Dantree is modest to a fault. See how you put him out of countenance. Sit down here, like a dear old thing, and tell me all about the rheumatism, and what you want me to get you for the winter; you'll have lots of time before the rain holds up.'

'The rain is holding up now, Kathie,' her lover said. 'I knew it was too violent to last. In ten minutes it will have ceased. Come, we can go.'

He could not account to himself for his feverish haste to leave this place—for the sudden and intense dislike he had taken to this grim, old woman.

'I'll go and see to the horses,' he said, 'and smoke a cigar in the porch, while you talk to your nurse.'

He quitted the room. Katherine looked after the graceful figure and negligent walk with eyes full of girlish admiration; then she turned to Hannah.

'Isn't he handsome, nursey? Now confess; you're sixty or more, but you like handsome people still, don't you? Isn't he just the very handsomest man you ever saw in all your life?'

'He's rare and handsome, Miss Kathie,' the old woman said, slowly; 'rare and handsome surely. But, my little one, don't you marry him. It's not the face to trust—it's as false as it's fair.'

'Now Hannah, I can't listen to this—I really can't. I thought you would have wished me joy, if nobody else. Everybody says horrid things—nothing is too bad to be said of Mr. Dantree—and all because he is poor and I am rich—fortune-hunter, adventurer, false. It's a shame.'

'It's the truth, my bairnie. Be warned, and draw back while there is yet time.'

Miss Dangerfield arose with calm dignity. It wasn't worth while losing one's temper with old Hannah.

'Good bye, nursey—I'm going. You are disagreeable to-day, and I always go away immediately from disagreeable people. I shall send you those flannels, though, all the same. Good-bye.'

She was gone as she spoke. The rain had nearly ceased, and Mr. Dantree was waiting for her impatiently. His dark southern face looked strangely pallid in the gray twilight of the wet October evening.

'Come Kathie; it will rain again presently, and night will fall in half an hour. The sooner we see the last of Bracken Hollow the better.'

'How frightened he is of Bracken Hollow!' Katherine said, laughing; 'like a child of a bogie. Why, I wonder?'

'Why, indeed? Why do you hate Mrs. Vavasor, Katherine? She hasn't given you any cause—yet, I can't tell you why, but I never want to see Bracken Hollow again.'

She looked up into his face. What a darkly moody expression it wore! It half spoiled his beauty. And all the way home, through the chill, rainy, gloaming, old Hannah's words rang like a warning in her ears: 'False as fair—false as fair!'

CHAPTER VIII.

A LETTER FROM NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. Dantree dined at Scarswood and rode homeward through the wet darkness somewhere before midnight.

It had been a very pleasant evening, and the Louisianian was in the best possible spirits as he rode back to Morecambe. The day was drawing near when a more pleasant abode than Morecambe would be his—when he would reign supreme at Scarswood Park.

'The governor can't hold out very long now,' Mr. Dantree mused. 'After thirteen years of hill life in India, his liver can't be the size of a walnut—and then, he's apoplectic. Your short-necked, florid-faced, healthy looking old buffers are always fragile blossoms; it's a touch-and-go with them at any moment. And he's taking his daughter's engagement to my noble self desperately to heart—he's been breaking every day since. I wonder what's up between him and the little widow? It wouldn't be pleasant if she should turn out to be a first wife, or something of that sort, and at his death produce an interesting heir or heiress and oust Mrs. Dantree. It looks suspiciously like it; she's got a strong claim of some kind on him, and he's more afraid of her than he ever was of the savagest Sepoy out yonder. I wish I could get at the bottom of the matter, before I commit myself further and slip the ring over Miss Dangerfield's finger. Not that it matters very greatly—neither matrimonial nor any other fetters ever could bind me. It may all turn out right, however, and I may reign grand seigneur of Scarswood. Rather a change in a few months, for a penniless penny a liner. Marie's the only drawback. If ever she finds this out, there'll be the devil to pay in New Orleans.'

Miss Dangerfield had been rather surprised when on entering the drawing-room that evening, after her wet ride from Bracken Hollow, she found her cousin Peter playing chess with Mrs. Vavasor. It was the first time since their quarrel that he had entered the house. She went over to him with the frank, girlish grace that always characterized her, and gave him her hand.

'Welcome back to Scarswood, cousin,' she said; 'I began to think you had quite deserted us. Is it to the claims of kinship or to the facinations of Mrs. Vavasor we owe the present visit, I wonder?'

'A little of both, Kathie, and a cousinly desire to offer my congratulations to the future Mrs. Dantree. I wish you both every happiness.'

He did not look at her as he said it, and something in his voice struck unpleasantly on Katherine's ear.

'You are very good,' she said, a little coldly. 'May I overlook your game? Who is going to win?'

'I am, of course. It's come of a race, Kathie, that always win.'

But Mr. Dangerfield was mistaken.

'Check! Mrs. Vavasor cried, sharply and triumphantly, a few minutes after. 'Your race may always win except—when they have a Vavasor for an enemy.'

Katherine's eyes sparkled.

'Try again, Peter,' she said; 'a Danfierfield never yields!'

'I fear I must; I am no match for Mrs. Vavasor. Ah! here is Dantree—lucky dog! I must go over and congratulate him. It's not every day a poor devil drops into eight thousand a year and the finest place in the county.'

'Katherine, dear, suppose you try,' Mrs. Vavasor gaily exclaimed, 'and vindicate the honour of the Dangerfields. I play chess pretty well; but who knows—you may become more than a match for me.'

'Well,' Katherine said coolly, 'I think in the long run I would. I have a great deal of determination—obstinacy perhaps you might call it—and when I make up my mind to do anything, I generally do do it.'

PROGRESS OF THE T., G. & B.

The Board of Directors of the T., G. & B. Railway met yesterday afternoon in the offices of the Company. There was a full attendance, and the work at present going on the road was freely discussed. From the engineer's report of the progress of the work it was found necessary to postpone the changing of the guage from the 12 to the 26th inst. Three iron bridges, each 50 feet long, were completed on the line last week, one in the township of Arthur, over the Four Mile Creek, another over the Sauble River at Williamsford, and the third over the Spey River at Chatsworth. The Board of Directors will take a trip over the road next Friday, for the purpose of inspecting the work and making any suggestions that its members may consider advisable.

OBITUARY.

It is with regret that we this week announce the death of Mr. George Lamb, Sr. He had been suffering for a number of years from heart disease, and his demise, though very sudden, was not altogether unexpected. He was one of the pioneers of the County of Grey, and a resident of the Township of Glenelg for about 28 years. He was born in Fifeshire, Scotland in the year 1815, and came to Canada in 1850. He first made his home in Brantford, where he resided for three years, from whence he removed to the Township of Glenelg, where he remained ever since, where he had with unceasing toil and indomitable energy succeeded in hewing out a comfortable home for himself, and at the age of 66, when most men would expect to sit down and enjoy the fruits of half a century of unremitting labour, he passed quietly away to a better land. He leaves a large family to mourn his loss. Mr. Lamb was well and favourably known throughout the Township, and will be sadly missed by his large circle of acquaintances.

"May our footsteps never falter
In the path that he has trod,
May we worship at the altar
Of the great and living God."

THE Marquis of Lorne left Quebec for England on the 5th inst. An address was presented to him by the Lieut. Governor of Quebec, to which his Excellency made a suitable reply. His reply is the subject of considerable comment to-day, especially that portion in which he states that nothing but domestic misfortune would make him give to another the charge so dear to him, which is interpreted as foreshadowing his resignation.

SAYS the Mail:—Several of our contemporaries are discussing a very important subject—the wool and mutton question. The London Free Press thinks that Mr. Brown, the superintendent of the experimental farm at Guelph, has demonstrated that the description of sheep which will return farmers the greatest net profit is a Southdown grade. The Lachute Watchman thinks the experiments of Senator Cochrane and Hon. Mr. Abbott prove that the Shropshire Downs are the best description, both for the mutton and the fleece.

G. B. & W. RAILWAY.

The Georgian Bay and Wellington Railway is now completed to Durham, and the people of that town, celebrated the event on Monday last in grand style. A special excursion train left Durham at 7 a. m., for Stratford, arriving at that place at 10:30. The visitors were shown round the town by the Reeve and councillor Read. At one o'clock the return trip commenced and on arriving at Mount Forest, a halt of an hour was made, during which a lunch was served under the auspices of the town council. On arriving at Durham the principal guests were entertained at a banquet at the leading hotel, after which a meeting was convened in the town hall. Mr. Geo. McKechnie, reeve of the town, presided, and addressed congratulating all concerned on the completion of the railway thus far were delivered by Messrs. Jas. McMullen, vice-president of the road; S. S. Fuller, president of the Stratford and Port Huron railway; D. D. Hay, M. P. P., D. Scrimger, T. M. Daley, of Stratford; H. McKeown, Mayor of Palmerston; Dr. Barnhart, Mayor of Owen Sound, Geo. Jackson, M. P., and others. Hopes we express that before long the road would be further estended to Owen Sound, a distance of twenty-eight miles. The best of feeling prevailed, and confidence was felt that the opening of this line would make a beginning of great prosperity and growth for Durham, Mount Forest, and surrounding districts. After the meeting, the celebration of the day had a fitting conclusion in a grand ball.

SOME of our local cotems. are advocating the total abolition of our County Councils. We cannot go quite that far, but we do think the expenses connected therewith can be very materially reduced. For instance, we see no necessity for three sittings of that august body annually, when all that is required could be managed in two, If anything very important occurred, requiring immediate attention, a special meeting could easily be convened; but this we think would seldom occur.

Then again we believe that one representative for each municipality is all that is required. Representation according to population is well enough in our Dominion Parliament; in fact it is a necessity; but we see no reason that the same principal should be introduced into our County Councils. We think the Warden's address might very well be done away with, and a day thereby saved. This mimicry, by our municipal bodies of Parliamentary usages, is a perfect farce and a useless expense, and the sooner it is sent to oblivion the better.

The reduction of the number of representatives can only be made by Act of Parliament, but it lies with the people to have the other reductions made, by sending only such men as will pledge themselves to move in the matter at the earliest moment.

We some weeks ago asked how it was that a Monthly cattle fair had never been held in Markdale, and urging the people of our village to move in the matter. As yet we have not heard of anything having been done. How is it that our citizens, who are proverbial for their energy and push in other matters, are so supine in this? The holding of such a fair would be a decided benifit to our business men. It would bethe means of bringing a vast concourse of people to our village, who otherwise would rarely or never visit it, and would be the means of advertising our village, and prove to the out side world, that for its size, Markdale is "Second to None" in Ontario. Come gentlemen wake up, The December Session of the County Council is approaching, and if anything is to be done it must be done at once. Flesherton, and many other of our neighboring villages have their monthly fairs, and reap a great benefit therefrom. Don't let it be said that Markdale, the premier village of the County of Grey, is falling behind her sister villages on this question.

OSPREY.

From a Correspondent.

About three inches of snow fell Friday night and Saturday. The roads are in a very bad state.

Several hundred rods of fence were put into amusing positions last Monday night. Several ploughs and other articles are not to be found, and rewards (as high as fifty dollars in some cases) are being offered for the culprits.

Mr. W. L. B. Hamlin, of Maxwell, is now doing a rushing business. Success to him

The parcel of money lost by Mr Milne, on the 29th of October, has not been found yet. We believe it is said to have contained a considerable sum.

Prayer meetings are being conducted in the northern part of the Township, by the Rev. John Chisholm, who is very energetic in his labors.

In Feversham everything seems to be quiet; everyone trying to get through the mud as best they can.

EUGENIA.

From our own Correspondent.

Hollowe'en, was calebrated in due form in this neighborhood, the fences were built across the roads, and in some places logs were piled up so that it was impossible to pass with a team, ploughs were found in the morning hanging in tree tops, some of our farmers are yet looking for their's, others found it necessary to get help to take theirs down from the tree tops, wakening the Inhabitants at 12 mid night, by ringing the school bell, that's what is called hollowe'en.

Our school ground will soon wear the minature outward appearence of a central prison, the ground is being enclosed with a high board fence, it is said one of the trustees is a contractor I suppose you have weather in Markdale, our own opinion nearly agree with pats, that we are goink to have eight months of winter and four of bad weather. If Vennor has anything to the contuary let us hear from him, quick.

If you want to enjoy a soft drive, take the gravel at Flesherton and go east, young man. Please correct the gravel above and say M-U-D, in big letters like that, so that people can hear them.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Milne, of Maxwell, lost quite a sum of money, and has strong suspicion who the guilty parties are. I would have let you know in time for last week's issue of your paper, but thought your correspondent would have informed you.

Yours, &c.

NEMO.

MEAT INSPECTOR'S OFFICE.

Toronto, November 5th, 1881.

SIR,—You are hereby cautioned against receiving, buying, selling, or otherwise trading Poultry, the crops or craws of which are full, or partly so, whether such crops or craws have been stuffed, or otherwise filled with proper food, or with hay, straw, grass, leaves, stones, sand, wood, or any other substance, or inflated with the human breath, or by any wind instrument; all such fraudulently dressed and unwholesome poultry being liable to confiscation and the owners or dealers therein prosecuted according to LAW.

ROBERT AWDE,
Inspector of Meat, &c.

AUBREY DELEMAINE.—Last Monday evening this "Boy Wonder" gave one of his Entertainments in Hull's Hall, in this town and was largely attended. The usual "free tickets" were not given to members of the Press, but that omission of courtesy does not cause us to detract the merit of the Entertainment. As a Ventriloquis, the Professor has few equals on the continent of America; while his Demontiprestism, and Hydreapmephistoplas, filled the audience with an astonishment there has never before met the gase of a Markdale audience. The entertainment was so well received that the Professor was solicited to give us a re-hearing and to which we believe he has conditionally consented. So mote it be we could listen to it forever.

REMINISCENCES OF A TRIP FROM OWEN SOUND TO SAULT STE MARIE.

RIDAL BANK, Oct., 13, 1881.

Our last communication left us at Bruce Mines. We mailed it some time ago, and if it did not reach you we will re-write it from memory shortly.

Nine miles from across the water from Bruce Mines to the southwest brings Hilton on St. Joseph's Island, next to Manitoulin, this is the largest Island on the Lakes. On seeing St. Joseph's we think of the prominent part it takes in Canadian History. We think of La Salle, Jolliette, Marquette, and other heroic Frenchmen of long ago, who traversed it and endured the most severe trials and hardships to preach to and convert the red man of the forest. It was on this Island that some centuries ago a French priest was massacred while at mass by Algonquin Indians, who suddenly sprang in upon a band of Hurons and murdered the priest and the greater part of the worshippers. The descendants of those who were left after this affray now live at Loretto in Quebec, Province. It was from here commander Roberts embarked in 1812, when he took Michilimackinac. It is pleasant to set foot on such historic soil. But for all the historic memories, Hilton is not a large place, a store or two, post office and dock are about all that constitute this village. Fourteen miles more around the north side of this isle brings us to Richardson's Dock, another port on St.Joseph's. Another place like Hilton, with appearently a little more life and trade. The land on St. Joseph's is good but a little stony. A gradual rise is everywhere preceptible on the shore. A-board and sailing once more. Twenty seven miles to the west, and we catch sight of Garden River. Truly it is the garden of anything we have seen in Algoma, if a pleasant situation has anything to do with a place. Nestling on the bank of the noble St. Marie River, with a range of mountains half a mile to the north running westward it occupies a most pleasing position. If the ladies of this place were as pretty as the place itself we would remain, but alas! there is too mush Indian in them, and when the whistle blows we take ourselves on board. Twelve more miles westward up the narrow winding river which drains Lake Superior, and we are at Sault Ste Marie, the Capital of Algoma. It is within a quarter of a mile of Lake Superior, and contains the Court House, fail and Registry Office. The best school house in Algoma is here, and we have never seen its equal as a public school. The brick school at Markdale is a good one but it does not compare with this. This one is heated with steam, the water is supplied by a wind mill, hot and cold water in every room, and neat wash room go to make some of the comforts of this building. The ladies are much prettier here than at Garden River. This is the proposed terminus of the Edgar Line of Railway. It boasts of a well edited paper, "The Pioneer." The country back is well settled in. Business is flush. Sault Ste Marie is four hundred and thirty six miles from Collingwood. We see here what has not been yet started elsewhere in Algoma, viz, a dairy farm. The proprietor does a good business in ice cream, and in supplying boats. His stock of cows average seventeen. The Sault does a good business in cord-wood. The teacher's examination is being held here (July 7). Nearly thirty candidates wrote. Over twenty were successful. The river here runs very rapidly and is about one-fourth of a mile in width. We cross over the ferry for ten cents, and find our selves in Michigan, and in a large town called Sault Ste Marie. We find the people kind and full of business. We only see two good buildings. They are the court house and school. No building in the whole place will compare with the "Markdale House." The women are denced pretty, and we wish our Misses was not with us. This, however, did not stop us from returning a friendly smile. Never mind, the next time we go on a tour we will leave Susan Jane at home. The fort here is called Fort Brady. Every morning and evening, at sunrise and sunset, the soldiers fire a cannon loaded with blank shell across the river. This is to frighten us Canadians. We have now completed the trip, and are well pleased with it and make steps homeward. Nothing to mar our pleasure, except a quarrel with Susan Jane, who grew jealous in the Sault because we took a pretty girl for a drive. Married men, when you travel leave your wife at home. We will now make a short resume of our trip. The most thriving village is Manitowaning. The oldest settled place is Bruce Mines. The best buildings are at the Sault. The best Hotel is at Gore Bay, the best sawmill at Thesselone, and the prettiest women and the fattiest babies are at the Sault, and bear in mind we are judges of the latter. In my next I will consider the Indian question.

LOUIS N. THIBAUDEAU.

GET OUT DOORS.

The close confinement of all factory work, gives the operatives palid faces, poor appetite, languid, miserable feelings, poor blood, inactive liver, kidneys and urinary troubles, and all the physicians and medicine in the world cannot help them unless they get out of doors or use Hop Bitters, the purest and best remedy, especially for such cases, having abundance of health, sunshine and rosy cheeks in them. They cost but a trifle.—Christian Recorder.

A SURPRISED PHYSICIAN.

A DYING PATIENT RECOVERS THROUGH THE INTERPOSITION OF A HUMBLE GERMAN.—Some weeks ago Dr. G——, a very reputable and widely-known physician, living on C—— street, was called to attend a very complicated case of rheumatism. Upon arriving at the house he found a man about forty years of age, lying in a prostrated and serious condition, with his whole frame dangerously affected with the painful disease. He prescribed for the patient, but the man continued to grow worse, and on Sunday evening he was found to be in a very alarming condition. The knees and elbows and larger joints were greatly inflamed and could not be moved. It was only with extreme difficulty that the patient could be turned in bed, with the aid of three or four persons. The weight of the clothing was so oppressive that means had to be adopted to keep it from the patient's body.

The doctor saw that his assistance would be of no avail, and left the house, the members of the family following him to the door, weeping. At this critical hour, a neighbor, a poor and humble German shoemaker, appeared to the grief stricken ones as a saving angel. He had heard of the dispair of the family, and now asked them to try his remedy, and accordingly brought forth a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil. As a drowning man will catch at straws, so the poor wife applied this remedy; she had no hope, but would try anything, as a matter of duty.—The first application eased the patient very much; after a few hours they used it again, and, wonder of wonders, the pain vanished entirely! Every subsequent application improved the sufferer, and in two days he was well and out. When the doctor called a few days after, he was indeed surprised; for instead of a corpse, he found a new-made man.—Exchange.

PREPOTENCY OF PERCHERON HORSES

It is claimed by high authority that Percheron horses are possessed of more endurance, are capable of performing a greater amount of quick, heavy work, are more tractable and easily broken than any other breed of large horses. And that the colts, the produce of Percheron stallions, partake in a greater degree of the qualities of their sires, and from their great value bring higer prices on the markets, than those from any other of the large breeds. These are facts that will be greatly appreciated by the public. It is well known that of all countries where draft horses are raised, the French people are the only ones who make a practice of leaving all the males entire, and of working them before and after the service ends, a practice that has been in vogue in France for hundreds of years, and to which may be attributed much of the superior excellence of the race. Every one knows that the only way to secure a high physical or mental development is to adapt a judicious and systematic course of exercise. And the grand results attained by the French have been by carrying out the principle of breeding from sires and dams both develloped physically to the highest degree by constant use in such work as their progeny would be called upon to perform.

This system, practiced continually, has increased the prepotency of each generation, and concentrated into transmissable qualities all of those valuable elements developed by juddicious training of ages. Therefore, in their progeny are found the docile and willing workers, with a superior quality of muscle, and a density and a toughness of bone, a general vigor and powerful organization that cannot be obtained from any race whose sires have been for generations wholly expempt from even the most ordinary labor; and whose temper has been made irritable by constant confinement, in most cases in an issolated stable. Then, if valuable, good tempered and healthy, hardy work horses are desired, breed from those that possess these qualities, transmitted through sires and dams through the remotest ancestry. On the contrary, if soft, loose-muscled, spongy-boned, ill-natured horses are wanted, breed from those whose sires or progenitors have never known what the collar is, nor have ever been developed by actual seavice.—National Live Stock Journal, Chicago.

TIME, it is said, proves everything, and among other things it has proved the value of Dr. J. C. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral as a standard remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs. This is a household medicine with thousands of people, and deservedly so, for it has been in use more than forty years, and all who use it know that it accomplishes even more than is claimed for it. Nearly every community possesses evidences of its great curative power, in persons who have been cured by it of various throat and lung complaints, and who owe to it alone their recovery from the threatening symptoms of consumption. In emergencies like croup and sudden colds, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the remedy that every family should have at hand for the treatment of these cases as they arise.—Richmond, Va., Standard.

I. N. Stone, writing to the Fruit Recorder, says:—Seven years ago I had one acre of ground which I wish to set to strawberries the following spring, and knowing that there were a great many white grubs in every foot of it, concluded to plough in deep just before winter set in. I commenced one afternoon and ploughed one-fourth of it; a hard freeze at night kept me from ploughing the balance until spring, when I finished ploughing the piece and set it to strawberries. The plants on the fall ploughing were not disturbed at all by the grub, while those on each side were nearly all destroyed by them. Since then I have adopted the plan of ploughing fruit ground just before it freezes up for winter, and have not had any loss from grubs and cut worms.

HONESTY.—It is commonly said that you cannot make an honest man believe that white is black and vice versa, but those who have grey hair, by using the "CINGALESE HAIR RENEWER," will find that this apparent difficulty is easily overcome. For sale by all Druggists, 50 cents per bottle.

THRASHING MACHINE ACCIDENT.—A young man named Moran, son of Mr. Robert Moran, of Arran, while thrashing at Mr Morrison's in the above township on Friday last week, accidentally fell into the cylinder, and one of his legs mangled up to the knee. Medical assistance was immediately obtained, when it was deemed necessary to amputate above the knee. He lingered for a short time after the operation, when death ended his sufferings, and on Sunday last was buried.—Chesley Enterprise.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Habitual Constipation, Biliousness, Liver or Kidney Affections, the safest and best remedy is Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, the great family medicine. They can with perfect safety be given to the youngest child as they are purely vegetable in composition and mild in their action. Sold in large panel bottles at 50 cents A. TURNER & Co. special agents for Markdale.

"I hope this is not counterfeit?" said a lover, as he toyed with his sweetheart's hand. "The best way to find out is to ring it!" was the quick reply.

People are beginning to find out the true virtues of Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, and they are becoming the favorite family medicine of the Canadian public for all derangements of the Stomach, Bowles, Liver and Kidneys. In large bottles, at 50 cents. A. TURNER & Co., special agent for Markdale.

SOMETHING NEW.—A new wrinkle for raising funds at church and Sunday school fairs out west is as follows: The ladies write their names and weight on slips of paper, and the gentlemen draw the slips, each gentleman taking the lady whose name he has drawn to supper, and paying half a cent per pound on the weight of his partner. If the lady should happen to over-estimate her weight it isn't considered a sin, as it is for the benefit of the church.

"What is the meaning of the word tantalising?" asked the teacher. 'Please, ma'am,' spoke up little Johnny Holcomb, 'It means a circus procession passing the school house and the scholars not allowed to look out.'

Mr. G. S. Brown has bought out the saw mill at Markdale, and takes possession immediately. We trust he will make it a paying investment, and we heartily commend him to the good people of that section.—Monitor.

DOCTORS DISAGREE.—Some say whiskey hardens the brain; others say it softens it. Meanwhile people without brains will keep right on drinking it, as it don't make an atom of difference to them not an, atom.—Rochester Herald.

The place to buy Bedsteads, Spring beds, and Mattresses, G. Grant, Markdale.

The regular Quarterly business meeting of the Methodist church was held in the vestry on Monday last. There was a full attendance, and the regular business was transacted with the usual harmony. There is one feature however which we can scarcely understand, viz: how it is that there is a deficit in the the minister's salary in a year of such prosperity. One thing we do know—If every one would do anything like their fair share, there would be no deficit. But they all appear willing in these matters—some willing to pay, and the others just as willing to let them.

Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, are rapidly taking the place of all other purgatives, including Pills, Powders, etc. Their action is mild yet effectual and they are a certain cure for all bilious complaints. In large bottles, at 50 cents. A. TURNER & Co., special agents for Markdale.

The people of the West back line, in the McLeod and Whitby neighborhood have decided to erect a building in that locality next spring for the purpose of holding a Sabbath School, and also for singing school. This will, it is said, accommodate 70 children who cannot conveniently attend the village schools. We think it a very commendable move on the part of the people of the above line, who, we understand, are unanimous in the movement. The line is proverbial for large families, and according to this movement the heads of families appear to be awake to the importance of making provision for their spiritual as well as temporal welfare.

Union Cashmeres, 20, 25, 30, 35, and 40 cents. All Wool Cashmeres, 50, 55, 60, 65, 75, 80, 90, and $1.00, purchased by W. J. McFarland when in Manchester, England.

Mr. John Black, well known in Glenelg, and formerly Freight Agent at Markdale Station, left here on Tuesday with his family for Iowa State. We wish him success in the West.

The weekly newspapers are crying out, and with good cause, against the unjust competition to which they are subjected to at the hands of the big Toronto weeklies. The Globe and the Mail in their rivalry with each other are not making money themselves and are making the country weeklies needless sufferers. The fact is that those two papers, both in their daily and weekly editions, are doing their best to destroy legitimate journalism in the country.—Toronto World.

Did you see those Bob-sleighs at McKenna & Mason's? For the money they are the best I have seen.

PLEASE NOTE THAT

The cheapest place to purchase MEN'S BOOTS, WOMEN'S BOOTS, CHILDREN'S BOOTS, RUBBERS and FELT OVER-SHOES is at W. J. McFarland's. 17 cases received this week. They are selling fast.

Mr. Henry Foster has rented the shop just vacated by A. Turner & Co., and is now opening out a fine stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Boots and Shoes, and in fact everything usually kept in a general store. Too busy to write out an advertisement this week, but will appear in our next issue.

Order your Bob-Sleighs at McKenna & Mason's. That is where I get mine; they build the best for the price.

Miss Burch has her shop full of new and stylish goods in her line, and is doing a good business. By close attention to business, and a wonderful business tact in managing the same she has won the esteem and patronage of a large custom.

THE BAZAAR, DINNER AND CONCERT.—The ground being covered with soft snow there was not a large turn out; however, things proved very satisfactory generally. The dinner was excellent, and judging from the manner in which the good things disappeared, all present were of the same opinion. There was a large variety of fancy and useful articles in the Bazaar department, a great many of which were disposed of. The concert was well attended, and the programme, which was well selected, and printed in regular programme style, was disposed of with great credit to those who took part. The Election Cake was attended to about the middle of the programme, or during an intermission between Parts 1 and 2. Miss Dundas and Miss Hollingshead were nominated, and the canvassing commenced by W. Haskett for the latter and Mr. Turner for the former. After the audience were thoroughly canvassed Miss Hollingshead was declared elected to cut the cake. The proceeds of this part of the concert alone amounted to over $46.00. As will be seen in an article in another column clipped from the church magazine, the proceeds in all amounted to the handsome sum of $150.

The Dominion Telegraph Office in Markdale has been closed as a result of the amalgamation with the Montreal Co. We regret this as Mr. Wilcox, the agent is a first class Operator and was courteous and always at his post.

The members of the Ladies Aid Society, held their annual Dinner, Bazaar, and Concert on Saturday last. The day did not prove as suitable as expected, and the bad state of the roads, combined with the most unpropitious weather, had much to do in making the takings of the day less than that of previous years. Yet considering all the untoward circumstances the proceeds reached the highest expectations of the most sanguine. We cannot as yet say the exact amount realised, but we feel sure it will not be less than $150. During the little more than three years which the L.A.S. has existed, it has contributed no less than $872 to the present church building and its furniture. Such a result is evidence of unusual enthusiasm and devotion to the interests of the church, and the Society deserves the best thanks of the congregation for its industry and devotion.—Mission Magazine.

The International Wheat Exchange.

1881-2.

OPEN TO LIVE FARMERS EVERYWHERE.

The CERTAIN BENEFITS—Again I say CERTAIN BENEFITS—to be derived from the prompt patronage of this movement have been opened to live farmers everywhere.

I want no one to invest a dollar—more or less—in it, who has the slighest fear that it will be a bad investment of that dollar—more or less.

As shown by my late edition (5500 copies) of "Traveller," (my own journal, which, see for September and November, 1881). This movement was inaugurated for the benefit in Canada, of the 40,000 "LONDON MUTUAL" MEMBERS and through them for the country at large, and for the farmers of the States of the West.

MEMBERS OF THE "LONDON MUTUAL" OF CANADA.

I tried to keep it for you, but finding the movement POPULAR EVERYWHERE, and the current clamor that it should be made as broad in its application in Canada as was proposed for the farmers of the States in the West. I finally yielded to the advice of many of my warmest, old-time friends of maturer years than myself, by opening it to the world.

Having done so, I have lived for the past month almost sleepless, to create for "International Wheat Exchange" AN IMMORTAL LIFE. I have found it necessary to delay my leaving for the West for a few weeks, in order to form CANADIAN CONNECTIONS at various points throughout the Dominion, with proper men to represent and receive orders through my movement. I have made such connections through Grey and Bruce, and now go West.

W. J. M'FARLAND, ESQ.,

has kindly undertaken to receive orders, and make delivery of Western grain for me at MARKDALE. Orders must be promptly given by all who wish to be thus benefitted. Before November 15th, current, I shall send Mr. McFarland and the other Canadian representatives of INTERNATIONAL WHEAT EXCHANGE, so far as appointed, samples of all the best flouring spring wheats (already collected and coming in) from the best wheat producing sections of Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Dakota and Wisconsin.

MY AIM BEING TO INTRODUCE INTO EACH DISTRICT, ONLY SUCH GOOD FLOURING VARIETIES AS WILL BE SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR THE SOIL OF EACH LOCALITY, my arrangements in the west have been made accordingly. Every farmer can, therefore, order intelligently from the samples sent to Canada, which will be labelled as follows:—

Name of Wheat..........
Name of Grower..........
Where Grown..........Section..........
Township..........Range..........
Nature of Soil..........
Average yield per acre..........
How long grown there..........
Signed..........
Agent.

Thousands of such labelled specimens are now awaiting my arrival in Iowa.

I have lived for three months under

A VERITABLE VOLCANO OF THOUGHT

In order to make my International Wheat Exchange a sure success for all who patronize it; to make it result so that I can look back from future years upon it with PERFECT SATISFACTION. I shall, therefore, carry it to a successful issue, honorably and well for the benefit of all who show their money in it. Good wishes and hopes for my success are kind, BUT WILL NOT MOVE WHEAT. I shall move NO MORE NOR NO LESS east or west than I have orders for at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on December 15th, next. I shall move nothing east or west but the CLEANEST AND BEST FLOURING VARIETIES. In order to have Western grown wheat CLEAN FOR CANADA, I shall have with me through the West one of the CELEBRATED 1ST PRIZE FANNING MILLS, from the Factory of R. H. McKay, Walkerton, Ont., which, from the several severe tests I have given it, I know will not disgrace Canada ANYWHERE ON EARTH.

I look forward confidingly for a noble patronage of INTERNATIONAL WHEAT EXCHANGE from the Wheat Growers of this continent in order to make it as eminet a success (before I sit down to next Chistmas' dinner) as my circulation of the "WHITE RUSSIAN" and "LOST NATION" has been for the miller and consumer and profitable to the producer.

Elsewhere in this and next issue will be found a few of the HOME AND CONTINENTAL ECHOES I have had SPEAKING FOR THEMSELVES.

Having the originals of hundreds of just such kindly and assuring echoes from across this continent. there shall not—cannot—be any failure, ON MY PART, to make the INTERNATIONAL WHEAT EXCHANGE A GLORIOUS SUCCESS.

THE MOVEMENT NOW LIVES THROUGH FIVE STATES OF THE WEST.—A SURE SUCCESS! ITS FUTURE IN THE DOMINION OF CANADA DEPENDS ENTIRELY UPON THE FAVOR OF THE PEOPLE NOW. CHAS T. DOYLE, Manager of the International Wheat Exchange, Walkerton, Canada, and Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

No Preparation on earth equals ST. JACOBS OIL as a safe, sure, simple and cheap External Remedy. A trial entails but the comparatively trifling outlay of 50 Cents, and every one suffering with pain can have cheap and positive proof of its claims.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts., or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

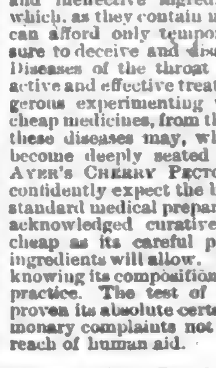
THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.



In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!

LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.

A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham st., N. Y.

THE CONCEITED LOVER.

love two maidens, each so rare
I know not which to woo;
And one is dark, the other fair,—
What would you have me do?

Marg'ret, my pearl, has deep blue eyes,
An earnest, noble face;
But Salomie no less I prize
For her sweet Spanish grace.

Then both can sing my favorite song;
One in soprano clear;
The other's voice, low, sweet, yet, strong—
Which I would rather hear.

Which? there's no doubt. I want them both,—
(Both I could easily win.)
To give up either I am loth;
To wed both were a sin.

O Cupid! tell me what to do
In this perplexing case—
My heart's divided,—judgment too,—
Betweed each bonnie face.

What! both engaged? Don't tell me that!
How cruel! And such men!!
Compared with me!!! inferior! flat!
I'll never trust woman again.

VALUE OF DRAINAGE.

As a matter of fact there is very little land in our country that would not be improved by drainage. Many little soils are springy, and the crops are injured in them by stagnant water. Heavy land can never do its best until drained. Vast areas of low-lying but rich land are practically valueless for want of drains to carry off the redundant moisture which forbids the growth of any but aquatic plants. Many who admit the importance of this improvement are puzzled about the ways and means of effecting it. The Drainage Journal mentions the following plan, which is well worthy of serious consideration: 'Some enterprising tile manufactures select careful farmers who own flat lands and make them something like the following propositions: That the farmer make a careful estimate of his average crops, and the tile manufacturer proposes to furnish the tile necessary to drain thoroughly the lands designated in the agreement, the farmer to furnish the labour of putting in the drains at a stipulated price, to be paid out of the excess of crops grown on the land over and above the average yield before agreed upon, and the tile manufacturer agreeing to take the balance of the increase in four or five crops (as agreed), to cover the cost of the tile. On level lands, where the average crop in five years runs low and the land by nature is rich, it is a safe proposition for the tile manufacturer if the farmer honestly performs his part of the contract. On rich level lands, that need drainage and need it badly, it will pay twenty-five per cent. annually on the investment, and in some instances more."—Canadian Rural.

DESERVING OF PRAISE.

Too much cannot be expressed in favor of that unsurpassed remedy for coughs, colds, asthma, croup, sore throat, and all lung complaints. If you suffer from neglected colds, try Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam. The price is trifling, only 25 cents.

CLOVER.

A field of clover should be in the rotation of crops on every farm. Why? 1. It makes the best of hay, cut early and well cured. 2. The roots and dead leaves ploughed under are equal to a good coating of manure. 3. It is one of the best of cleaning crops. Even the Canada thistle can not stand before it. Cut at the proper time, thistles and all other weeds are prevented from going to seed. The second growth of clover will smother the thistle and other weed roots. This plan cleans better than fallowing, and keeps a crop in the ground all the time. No field goes to waste. Suppose you have six arable fields of ten, twelve, fifteen acres. Establish a six years' rotation. Manure a field each year. Clover a field each year. The farm will improve. There will be an end to "running down." Red clover is a long, tap-rooted plant. It will find the elements of fertility that may be in the soil, bring them to the surface, and store them there for future grain crops. Clover does most good sown alone. Prepare the land in the fall. Sow twelve pounds to the acre at the earliest moment in spring. A fair cutting may be had the first season. The second will give a better, and when the hay is off a second crop may be taken off for seed. Then plough under the old roots and dead leaves. The result will be a good seed bed for any grain you wish to sow.—Canadian Rural.

ALMOST YOUNG AGAIN.

My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy inactive condition of the whole system; headache nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family." A lady in Providence, R. I.—Journal.

HUMOROUS.

"How do you pronounce s-t-i-g-y?" Professor Stearns asked the young gentleman nearest the foot of the class. And a smart, bad boy stood up and said it depended a good deal whether the word applied to a man or a bee.—Go to the head young fellow.

People have no more right tho become dyspeptic, and remain gloomy and miserable, than they have to take poison and commit suicide. If the stomach becomes week and fails to perform it's functions, Burdock Blood Bitters will speedily remedy the trouble.

A darkey who was stooping to wash his hands in a creek, did not notice the peculiar actions of a goat just behind him; so, when he scrambled out of the water and was asked how it happened, he answered: "I dunno 'zactly; but 'peared as if the shore kinder h'isted and frowed me,"

"Just keep your bottle of whiskey in your closet and when the girls bring you your hot shaving water in the morning, you can mix your toddy quickly, and not a soul will know a thing about it," said the M. D. The plan worked well until the old man's daughter thought he must be going insane because he wanted to shave five or six times every day.

It would be a mighty mean man who would refuse to give a new note to borrow sufficient money to take up his outstanding paper at fifty cents on the dollar.

The New Haven Register observes that two establishments in Boston turns out sixty barrels of past each day; and yet there is a good deal of original matter in the Boston papers.

KEEP THE FEET DRY.

This is the season of sloppy weather so productive of colds, and lung troubles; neglected cold or damp feet is a great source of these difficulties. Cure your cough with Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam. Pleasant to take and always reliable.

A squint-eyed man, who stole a valuable picture from an art store, on being asked by the Judge before whom he was brought his reason for the theft, replied that he had been told by several photographers that it was impossible for a man with such an expression of face to take a good picture, and he wanted to prove the contrary.

No article ever attained such unbounded popularity in so short a time as Burdock Blood Bitters, and that too during the existence of countless numbers of widely advertised bitters and blood purifiers. It is evident that this medicine begins its work at once, and leaves no desirable effect unattained.

A Chicago man visiting Cincinnati was being shown round by a citizen who said: "Now let us go and see widows' home." The Chicago man put his finger by the side of his nose and winked, and then said: "Not much, Mary Ann. I saw a widdow home once and it cost me $16,000.—She sued me for breach of promise, and proved it on me. No, sir; send the widows home in a hack."

INTERESTING PARAGRAPHS.

Gooderham & Worts, of Toronto, give employment to one thousand men.

An average of twenty thousand letters are posted daily in Toronto.

Garfield's picture is to be placed on five cent International postal letter stamps.

The Oka Indians have been successfully located on their new hunting grounds in Muskoka, and all seem satisfied.

Wm. Knight, a well-to-do farmer of Amaranth township, was last week committed to Dufferin gaol as a dangerous lunatic.—Orangeville Advertiser.

Thirty thousand dollars has been expended in building in the village of Hanover. The Hanover Post is a spicy, clean, well got up paper printed in the above place.

The Credit Valley has opened up a new country for Toronto. The merchants of St. Thomas, Ingersoll, and Woodstock, as well as of the other thriving towns on the line, are now coming to this city as naturally as if they had been doing business here all their lives.—Mail

THE CAUSES OF COLDS.

Are getting overheated in hot rooms or crowded assemblies, sitting in a draught, or cooling too rapidly after exercise, muffling up warm and changing to lighter wrappings, cold and damp feet. No matter what is the cause Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam is the cure for all throat and lung dicase that induce consumption.

ORANGEVILDE, Oct. 28.—This morning about one o'clock a fire broke cut in a house belonging to one Isaac Hunter in the South Ward, and before anything could be done the place was completely destroyed. The fire originated in the explosion of a coal oil lamp. A part of the furniture was saved. Amount of insurance not known.

A BACHELOR IN DISTRESS.—A bachelor farmer residing at Oak River, Manitoba, wants a wife, and says there are forty-four others within a radius of six miles of his farm in the same condition as himself. He asks the editor of the Rapid City Standard to use his influence in persuading some Ontario girls to come out there and rescue the poor bachelors from their fate.

For assaulting Mr. John Berry, hotel keeper at Rocklyn, on the day of the Euphrasia show, Wm. and R. Neily were brought before the magistrates here, week before last, to answer to the charge. The case not being concluded it was postponed until last week, when they were fined $1 each, with costs amounting to over $30, and bound over to keep the peace for one year.—Monitor.

APPLE BLIGHT.—The cause is a parasitic fungoid plant which takes root in the bark, penetrates it, and spreads in the layer of cambium under the bark and destroys both. It spreads upward and downward until either a part of the tree or the whole of it is killed, and turns brown as if scorched by fire. The only remedy is to cut off the diseased parts as soon as they are seen to be affected and burn them at once, by which the spread of the disease is stopped. The sound wood only should be left. Draining the soil, the use of lime and wood ashes, and whitewashing the young trees with lime, act as preventatives.

The oleo-magarine question has a nearer interest for Canadians than has perhaps, been imagined, in this way: In the past winter, and up to the end of April, all the choicest beef tallow in various parts of Ontario had been bought up, and sent to Montreal, there to undergo a process of refining preparatory to being shipped to New York, where it was manufactured into oleo-margarine.

The best beef is young beef, reaching its greatest point of superiority at from two to three years. The same is true of sheep and swine. A wether, for the best mutton, should be in the market at two years. As a general rule a 250 pound pig is better in quality and more profitable than a hog weighing 500. The point of appreciation of quickly maturing animals is being reached, though somewhat gradually, and it remains to improve the various breeds, especial care being used to select animals to breed from that come to maturity at an early age.

This notice was once fixed upon a church door in Hertfordshire, and read in the church: "This is to give notice that no person is to be buried in this churchyard but those living in parish; and those who wish to be buried are desired to apply to me. Ephraim Grubb, Parish Clerk.

'Such as marrying a handsome tenor singer. Don't be angry, Katherine. Mr. Dantree is worthy of you, I am sure. Now, then, for a piched battle between you and me, and woe to the conquered!'

There was a sneering defiance underlying her words—a sardonic gleam in her black eyes that Katherine understood. There was more at stake than a simple game of chess; they looked at one another steadily for an instant, and then began the game.

The two gentlemen approached. Peter Dangerfield took his place behind the chair of the widow; Mr. Dantree leaned lightly over that of Kathie. They stood like two seconds watching a duel, and neither spoke. A profound stillness filled the long, velvet-hung, lamplit drawing-room, in which you could hear the light falling of the cinders in the grate, the ceaseless beating of the rain on the glass. Which would win?

The widow, it seemed. In the gleam of the lamplight there was a flush on her cheek that was not all rouge, a sparkle in her black eyes, that was not all belladonna. She wore a wine-coloured silk decollette, and her plump, white shoulders and arms shone like marble; the rich, ruby-red jewels flashed on her fingers, on her neck; a bracelet of fine gold and rubies encircled her wrist, and a crimson rose nestled in the shining, luxuriant blackness of her hair. All crimson and black—with a fiery intensity of purpose flushing her face, and that peculiar glittering smile of hers on her thin lips. Gaston Dantree thought of some beautiful Circe—some fatal siren come on earth to work ruin and darkness.

'And yet, after all,' he thought. 'I believe in my soul Katherine is more than a match for her. How coolly—how thoroughly calm and self-possessed she sits, not one pulse beating the quicker—while the eyes of her enemy are on fire with her devilish determination to win. In a long drawn battle of any kind between those two, I'd back the heiress of Scarswood.'

Then more and more absorbed in the game he forgot even to think. He bent over until his crisp black curls touched Katherine's cheek. She glanced up at him for a second—her still face brightening—a faint colour coming in her cheeks.

'A drawn battle, is it not, Gaston?' she said, 'and a true Dangerfield prefers death to defeat.'

Mrs. Vavasor saw both look and smile, and a savage resolution to win at all hazards possessed her. She knit her straight black brows and bent to the game, her lips compressed in one straight red line. She hated Katherine that moment with an intensity she had never felt before. How coolly she sat there making her moves, with a face of marble, while she was thrilling in every vein with a fever of excitement. And how she loved that man behind her, and how happy she was in that love.

'And to her mother I owe all I have ever suffered—the sin, the sorrow, the shame! Pray Heaven they may fix the wedding-day speedily, or I shall never be able to wait! I wonder how I have waited all these years and years. Ah! a false move my lady, a false move. The victory is mine!'

But the exultant thought came too soon. Katherine's move, made after long deliberation, certainly looked like a false one—the widow answered in a glow of triumph. A second later and she saw her mistake—Katherine's false-seeming move had been made with deliberate intention. Her eyes flashed for the first time—she made a last rapid pass and rose conqueror.

'Checkmated!' she cried, with a slight laugh of triumph. 'I knew I should vanquish you in the end, Mrs. Vavasor.'

'Dinner!' announced the butler, flinging wide the door, and Miss Dangerfield took the arm of Mr. Dantree and swept with him into the dining-room.

'You did that splendidly, Kathie,' he said; 'you have no idea how proud I am of your conquest; and she was so sure of winning. She hates you as those little venomous women only can hate—do you know it?'

'Certainly I know it,' Katherine responded carelessly. 'I have known it ever since I saw her first. She hates me and could strychnine me this moment with all the pleasure in life.'

'But why, I wonder?' said Mr. Dantree, 'you never knew her before she came here—you never did anything to harm her?'

'My dearest Gaston, it is not always the people who have done something to harm us we dislike the most. We detest them because we detest them. Mrs. Vavasor and I are antagonistic; we would simply hate each other under any circumstances. How bent she was on winning that game, and I—I should have died of mortification if she had.'

'Take care of her, Kathie! that woman means to do you injury of some kind before she quits this house. Whether it be for your mother's sake or your own, doesn't matter—she means to harm you if she can.'

Katherine threw back her head with an imperial gesture.

'Let her! I am not afraid. If it comes to that, I may beat her at her own game, as I did five minutes ago. She can't take you from me, Gaston,' with a little gay laugh—'can she? Anything else I fancy I can bear.'

He stooped and answered her in whispered words, and Katherine's face was quite radiant as she took her place at the table.

Mrs. Vavasor followed with Mr. Dangerfield. She had risen from the table and taken his proffered arm, quite white for an instant through all her rouge. He saw that pallor beneath paint and powder.

'And you are beaten after all, Mrs. Vavasor, and by Katherine Dangerfield! Your game of chess meant more than a game of chess—is it emblematic? She's fearfully and wonderfully plucky, this cousin of mine. Will she come off victorious at other games than chess, I wonder?'

She looked up at him for one moment, and all the passion, the rage, the hatred, smouldering within her, burst forth.

'I'll crush her,' she cried in a furious whisper. 'I'll crush her. And the day is very near now. This is only one more item added to the long account I owe her. She shall pay off all, the uttermost farthing with compound interest.'

'And stab through him,' Peter Dangerfield said darkly; 'the surest blow you can strike is one that proves him the traitor and fortune-hunter that he is. I believe in my soul it would be her death.'

I shall strip her of all—all—lover, father, name even. I will wait until her wedding-day and strike home then. When her cup of bliss is fullest and at her very lips, I shall dash it down. And my brilliant, haughty high-spirited heiress of Scarswood, how will it be with you then?'

Sir John was in his place—a darkly moody host, amid the lights, the flowers, and the wines. Mrs. Vavasor was even in higher spirits than usual. Mr. Dangerfield was talkative and agreeable, Katherine was happy, and disposed to be at peace with the world and all therein, even Mrs. Vavasor. She was loved, she was beloved—all life's greatest happiness is said in that. For Mr. Dantree, he was simply delightful. He told them illimitable stories of life in the southern States, until even grim Sir John relaxed into interest, and after dinner in the drawing-room sang for them his favorite after-dinner song, "When the Wine Cup is Sparkling Before Us," in his delicious voice, that enchanted even those who hated him most. The piano stood in a shadowy recess down at one extremity of the long room—Katherine and he had it all to themselves. Mrs. Vavasor was busy with some flimsy feminine handiwork. Mr. Dangerfield sat beside her, turning over a book of photographs, and Sir John, lying back in his easy chair, kept his eyes closed as though asleep. His face wore a worn look of care—he was watching those two shadowy figures at the piano, and as he listened to the man's voice, so thrillingly sweet, as he looked at his face—the lamplight streaming on his dusk Spanish beauty, he scarcely wondered at Katherine's infatuation.

'Fairer than a woman and more unstable than water,' he thought, bitterly, 'and this is the reed she has chosen to lean upon through life. My poor little Kathie, and I am powerless to serve you—unless—I speak and tell all. Heaven help you if this man ever finds out the truth.'

'Sing me something Scotch, Gaston,' Katherine said. She was seated in a low fauteuil, close beside him, her hands lying idly in her lap—her head back among the cushions. It was characteristic of this young lady that she had never done a stich of fancy work in her life. She was quite idle now, perfectly happy—listening to the howling of the October storm in the park, and Mr. Dantree's exquisite singing.

'Sing something Scotch—a ballad. If I have a weakness, which is doubtful, it is for Scotch songs.'

Mr. Dantree heard but to obey. He ran his fingers lightly over the keys, smiling slightly to himself, and glanced half-maliciously at the girl's supremely contented face.

'How well pleased she looks,' he thought; 'I wonder if I cannot change that blissful expression. Many women have done me the honour to fall in love with me, but I don't think any of them were quite so hard hit as you, not even excepting Marie.'

He played a prelude in a plaintive minor key, wonderfully sweet, with a wailing understrain, quite heart-rending, and sang. His face changed and darkened, his voice took a pathos none of his hearers had ever heard before.

> A weary lot is thine, fair maid—
> A weary lot is thine!
> To pull the thorns thy brow to braid
> And press the rue for wine.
> A lightsome eye, the soldier's mien,
> A feather of the blue,
> A doublet of the Lincoln green,
> No more of me you knew,
> My love!
> No more of me you knew.
>
> This morn is merry June, I trow,
> The rose is budding fain,
> But she shall bloom in winter snow
> Ere we two meet again!
> He turned his charger as he spoke
> Upon the river shore—
> He gave the lines a shake and said:
> 'Adieu for evermore,
> My love!
> Adieu for evermore.'

It died out faint and low as the last cadence of a funeral hymn. And then he glanced at Katherine. He had changed the expression of that sensitive face cruelly—it lay back now against the ruby red of the velvet, as colourless as the winter snow of which he sang. He arose from the piano with a laugh.

'Kathie, you are as white as a ghost. I have given you the blues with my singing, or bored you to death. Which?'

She laughed a little as she rose.

'Your song was beautiful, Gaston, but twice too sad—it has given me the heart-ache. It is too suggestive, I suppose, of man's perfidy and woman's broken trust. I never want to hear you sing that again.'

It was late when the two gentlemen bade good-night and left. Mrs. Vavasor took her night-lamp and went up the black oaken stairway, her ruby silk trailing and gleaming in lurid splendour behind her.

'Good-night, Kathie darling—how pale and tired the child looks! And you didn't like that Tyrolean Mr. Dantree's last song? It was the gem of the evening, to my mind, so suggestive and all that. (Bottes tout a ...) ... Mrs. Vavasor had a habit among her other gushing habits of gushing out into foreign languages now and then—'and try and get your bright looks back to-morrow. Don't let your complexion fade for any man—there isn't one on earth worth it. A demain—good night.'

> 'A lightsome eye, a soldier's mien,
> A feather of the blue,
> A doublet of the Lincoln green,
> No more of me you knew,
> My love,
> No more of me you knew!'

And with a last backward glance and still singing the ominous song, brilliant little Mrs. Vavasor vanished.

Mr. Gaston Dantree rode back to his temporary home at Morecambe in very excellents spirits. What an uncommonly good-looking, fascinating sort of fellow he must be that all the women should lose their heads for him in this fashion. Surely the gods who presided over his destiny must have been in a most propitious mood when they created him their bright particular star.

'I've always heard it is better to be born lucky than rich, and gad! I believe it. I was born a pauper. My mother vended apples in the streets of New York; and my father—well, the less said about him, the better. He bequeathed me his good looks, his voice, and his loose fitting morality, until the age of eight, I ran wild about the streets; my pretty face, my curly head, and artistic way of singing 'Oh, Susanna!' attracted the attention of Mrs. Weymore, rich, childless, sentimental, good-natured and—a fool. I was sent to school, tricked up in velvet and ruffles, kissed, praised, petted, flattered, spoiled by all the ladies, young and old, who visited my foster mamma; and by Jove! they've been at it ever since. Then at sixteen came that ugly little episode of the forged cheque. That was hushed up. Then followed the robbery of Mrs. Weymore's diamonds, traced clearly home to me. They would not overlook that I inherited my light fingered proclivities from my father as well as the good looks they praised; but they wouldn't take that into consideration. Then for four years there was the living by my wits—doing a little of everything under heaven. Then came New Orleans and my new and, I flattered myself, taking cognomen of Gaston Dantree, my literary ventures, and their success in their way. And then after three years more came old De Lausac and Marie—poor little Marie. I thought I had found the purse of fortunatus then, when, lo! the old fool must up and get married. And, as if that weren't enough, there must follow an heir, and adieu to all Marie's hopes and mine. Then I crossed the Atlantic to try my luck on this side the pond, and I believe I've accomplished my destiny at last, as lord of Scarswood and eight thousand a year. I believe I shall be a square peg, fitting neat and trim into a square hole. Katherine's a drawback—exacting, and romantic, and all that bosh—but everything as we wish it is not for this world below. The old gentleman will go toes up shortly. I shall take the name Sir Dantree Dangerfield, sink the Gaston, and live happy for ever after.'

Mr. Dantree was still singing that ballad of the faithless lover as he ran lightly up stairs to his room. He threw off his wet overcoat, poked the fire, turned up the lamp, and saw on the table a letter.

Now, a letter to the handsome tenor singer was not an agreeable sight. Letters simply mean duns or else—he snatched it up with an oath. This was no dun; it was something even worse. It was superscribed in a woman's hand, and was post marked New Orleans.

'From Marie, by Jupiter!' he exclaimed blankly. 'Now, how the dev—ah, I have it. It came to my address in London, and the publishers have forwarded it here. Shall I open it, or pitch it into the fire unread? Deuce take all women. Can they never let a fellow alone? What a paradise earth would be without them!'

He did not throw the letter into the fire, however. He threw himself in to an easy chair instead, stretched forth his splashed boots to the blaze and tore it open. It had the merit of being brief at least, and remarkably to the point:

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 16th, 1869.

GASTON:—Are you never going to write?—are you never coming back? Are you ill or are you faithless? The last surely; it would be in keeping with all the rest. Did your dead silence mean that I am deserted and for ever? If so, only say it, and you are free as the wind that blows. I will never follow you—never ask aught of you. No man alive—though he were ten thousand times more to me than you have been—shall ever be sued for fidelity by me. Come or stay, as you choose; this is the last letter I shall ever trouble you with. Return this and all my other letters—my picture also, if I am deserted. But oh, Gaston! Gaston! have I deserved this?

MARIE.

That was all. The woman's heart of the writer had broken forth in that last sentence, and she had stopped, fearing to trust herself. Mr. Dantree read it slowly over, looking very calm and handsome in the leaping fire-light.

'Plucky little girl!' was his finishing comment; 'it is hard lines on her, after all that past and gone. But there's no help for it, Marie. I have learned to love another—I have broken every vow—we have parted from each other—and your heart is lonely now, and all that sort of thing. I wonder if I ever had a heart! I doubt it. I'm like Minerva, a heart was left out in my make up; I was never really in love in my life, and don't want to be. Women are very well as stepping stones to fortune, fame, ambition; but for love in the abstract—bah! But poor little Marie! if I ever did approach the spooney, it was for her; if I have in me to care for anything or anybody but myself, it is for her.'

And then Mr. Dantree produced a little black pipe, loaded to the muzzle struck a fusee, and fell back again to enjoy himself.

He looked the picture of a luxurious Sybarite, lounging negligently among the cushions before the genial fire.

'And I know she'll keep her word,' he muttered reflectively. 'No breach of promise, no avenger on the track in this case. Gaston, my boy; all nice and smooth, and going on velvet. That's a good idea about sending back the letters and photograph. I'll act upon it at once. A married man's a fool who keeps such souvenirs of his bachelorhood about. And Kathie isn't the sort of girl either to stand that sort of nonsense—she's proud as the deuce, as becomes the daughter of an old soldier, and as jealous as the devil!'

Mr. Dantree arose, and crossing to where his writing case lay, unlocked it, and produced a package, neatly tied up with blue ribbon. They were letters only of a woman's letters—in the same hand as that of to-night and in their midst a carte de visite. He took this letter up and looked at it. It was the face of girl in her first youth a darkly piquante face, with two dark eyes looking at you from waving masses of dark hair—a handsome, impassioned face, proud and spirited. And Gaston Dantree's hard, coldly, brigh browneyes grew almost tender as he gazed.

'Poor child!' he said—'poor little girl? How pretty she used to look in her misty white dresses, her laces, the creamy she used to were, her dusk cheeks flushed, and her big blue eyes like stars! Poor little thing! and she would have laid a princely fortune at my feet, with her heart and hand if that old bloke, her grandfather, hadn't euchred her out of it. And I would have been a very good husband as husbands go, to little Marie, which is more than I'll ever be to the other one. Ah, well! Sic transit, and all the rest of it!—here goes!'

He replaced the vignette, added the last letter to the others, did them up neatly in a sheet of white paper, sealed the package with red wax, and wrote the address in a firm, clear hand:

"MLLE. MARIE DE LANSAC,
"Rue de——————,
"New Orleans, Louisina."

'I'll mail this to morrow,' Mr. Dantree said, putting it in the pocket of his overcoat; 'and now I'll seek my balmy couch and woo the god of slumber. I dare say it will be as successful as the rest of my wooing.'

Mr. Dantree undressed himself leisurely, as he did all things, and went to bed. But sleep did not come all at once; he lay awake watching the leaping firelight flickering on the wall, and thinking.

'What if, after all, something were to happen, and I were to be dished again, as I was in the New Orleans affair?' he thought. 'By George! it was enough to make a man cut his own throat, or—old De Lansac's. A million dollars to a dead certainty,—Marie the sole heiress, Marie dying for me. And then he must go and get married—confound him! I can't think Sir John Dangerfield is dotard enough for that, but still delays are dangerous. I'll strike while the iron's hot. I'll make Katherine name the day to-morrow, by Jove. Once my wife, and I'm safe. Nothing can happen then, unless—unless—Heavens and earth!—unless Marie should appear upon the scene, as they do on the stage and denounce me!

And then Mr. Dantree paused, and stared blankly at the fire.

'It's not in the least likely though,' he continued. 'Marie is not that sort of woman. I believe, by George! if she met me a week after she gets the letters back she would look me straight between the eyes and cut me dead. No—Marie never will speak—she would go to the scaffold with her head up and her big blue eyes flashing defiance, and it's a very lucky thing for me she's that sort. Still it will be a confounded ugly thing if she ever hears of me again either as Sir Dantree Dangerfield or the heiress of Scarswood's fiancee. She might speak to save Katherine. But no;' and then Mr. Dantre turned over with a yawn at last on his pillow, 'who ever heard of one woman saving another? Men do, but women—never. I'll have the wedding-day fixed to-morrow, and it shall be speedily.

CHAPTER IX.

THE THIRD WARNING.

The rain passed with the night, and a slight frost set in with the new day. Mr. Dantree was due at a hunting party at Langton Brake, to be followed by a ball at Langton Royals. He would meet Miss Dangerfield on his way to cover, and should fix their wedding-day.

'A southerly wind and a cloudy sky proclaim it a hunting morning,' Mr. Dantree hummed. 'Before I am three hours older I shall put my fate to the touch, "to win or lose it all." I wonder if a baronet's daughter could get up her trousseau in three months? She won't object to naming an early day, I know, she's in love with me beyond all redemption, and I'm in love with her—eight thousand a year.'

Mr. Dantree breakfasted, mounted 'a red roan steed,' and looked unspeakably well in his very becoming hunting costume, set off for the meet at Langton Brake.

The baronet's daughter was there before him, surrounded by half-a-dozen red-coats, sitting a powerful-looking black horse as though it had been an easy chair, and looking, as she always did on horseback, her best. But while she talked and laughed with her attendant cavaliers, her gaze kept ever impatiently turning in one direction, and as Gaston Dantree galloped up, a flash of welcome lit the clear eyes.

'Late, Gaston, late again. I wonder if you ever were or will be in time for anything in your life. Any man who would prove himself a laggard on such a glorious morning deserves—what does he deserve, Captain De Vere?'

'Loss of Miss Dangerfield's favour, the heaviest loss I know of. A laggard in the hunting field Mr. Dantree may be, but he certainly has proven himself anything but a laggard in love.'

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE, WHO SHALL DECIDE?

Nothing is more variable than the different opinions of medical men; but when they fail to agree, or to perform a cure in a chronic disease, the patients often decide for themselves, and take Burdock Blood Bitters, and speedily recover. It is the grand key to health that unlocks all the secretions, and liberates the slave from the captivity of disease.

TRICK OF A NOTED BURGLAR—TOOLS IN A WOODEN LEG.

The Leadville Democrate says; An episode that was quite amusing to a small circle of spectators occurred at the county gaol a few days ago, when one of the "cross-roaders" was brought in for board. Mike Govern, to whom has been given the sobriquet of "Limp Leg," acquired this title from the fact that when he was engaged in a legitiment occupation he was a victum in a railroad accident, and his injuries necessitated amputation at the knee. Mechanism furnished a substitute for foot and calf, and he started out to be a gambler. His crippled leg hindered him seriously from hard work. It was easier to steal than to labor, and his "game" limb was a fort and a bulwark against the vargant act. Consequently he had every natural advantage for a shining light as a loafer, and he stood on street corners unmolested. Einailp Limp Leg was arrested for complicity in a burglary in Chicago, and he was sent to the penitentiary. Having served his time, he naturally drifted to the west after he had established his identity as a burglar, and after having been arrested repeatitly on suspicion; and a few weeks ago, when the burglars were doing extensive work here, he was again taken in. There was little evidence before the grand jury, and upon a warrant was marked "Not a true bill." The doors were open to Limp Leg and the Jailer, Reese Tucker, told him that he might go. At this juncture Sam Tate stepped forward and whispered something in the ear of the Jailer Tucker. The jailer indulged in a bland smile, and turning to the fellow, who had lingered for a moment said:

"Limpy, let's see your tool chest before you go, will you?'

"What do you mean?" replied Limp Leg, feigning the most profound ignorance of what the jailer referred to.

"Oh, you needn't be afraid, the grand jury said you could go, and we want to see where you carry your burglars tools."

"Burglars' tools?" exclaimed Limp Leg, as the shade of color passed across his features.

"Yes, the set that you carry in your wooden leg," continued the jailer "You'd better show us the trick, now, or we'll have you re-arrested. If you do, we'll give you just one hour to get out of town with your stock of tools." At this Limp Leg reseated himself, and, pulling up his pants' leg, he exhibited the cork addition of extension.

"If you think you can find anything wrong with my leg just look at it your self," said Limp Leg, as he thrust it out toward the gaoler.

"Touch the spring!" shouted a voice from behind the bars.

"Touch the spring, Limpy," repeated the gaoler to the fellow, who was now wild with wrath.

Seeing that he was cornered, Limpy then reached down and, throwing his thumb nail on a needle that protruded from the cork leg, a small door flew open in obedience to his touch. A small hole was releaved here, and, inserting his finger, Limp Leg brough forth an assortment of articles that are employed in getting into the house of a man who has a Bank account. There are several skeleton keys, several pincers three or four splender files. This was indeed startling, and, sticking to his word, the jailer told Limp Leg to get up and get. The door of his tool chest was locked and he went off, leaving his curse behind him.

THE PROVINCE ROBBED.

HAMILTON, Nov. 8.—Some time ago the authorities of the insane asylum here discovered that sums of money and stores disappeared from that institution at intervals. The police were informed, as also Mr. Langmuir, who came to the city yesterday and conferred with the police. To-day the chief with detectives McKenzie, Gates and Castell, and Constable D. Campbell arrested John Shaw, steward of the asylum; Walter Muirhead, the well-known butcher of this city, and two men employed by the latter, John Frazer and John Laukman. Muirhead supplies the asylum with meat. It is said that one of them has made a clean breast of his connection with the alleged crime implicating all the others. The p... are reticent as to what really has occurred, but the above facts have been learned on good authority, and can be relied on as the correct state of affairs so far. It is said that Dr. Wallace, the medical superintendent, has suffered from petty thieving for some time, and that he was occasionally missing money from his drawer.—Toronto World.

THE LATE INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.

Dr. Hodgins, Deputy Minister of Education opened an investigation at Owen Sound, under authority of the Government, into the alledged irregularities in connection with the intermediate and other examinations at that place. The charges implicate the inspector, Mr. William Ferguson, several members of the examinating board and the classic master of the high school and a number of candidates, upwards of sixty witnesses have been summoned, and the trial will probably last several days. As this case is exciting considerable interest, we will endeavour to give a full report next week.

THE PRAIRIE PROVINCE.

Mr. James F. Sproule, a former resident of Markdale, but now of Winnipeg, has been here on a visit for over two weeks, he speaks in glowing terms of the prairie province and says, in his opinion, it is the province of our broad Dominion. Among the numerous items of interest that he favored us with, we give the following to our readers :—Board and lodging $5 per week, laborers get from $2.25 to $2.60 per day, Brick layers $7. per day and carpenters from $2.50 to $4. The Pacific Railway and its branches are being pushed on with vigor, as are the other roads under construction Tracklaying on the main branch of the C. P. R. is being done at the rate of two miles per day, about 50 miles of the South-western branch of the same road will be completed this fall. The main line from Thunder bay to Winnipeg will be completed by the opening of Navagation next spring, immigrants to the great lone land will thus be enable to reach their destination without passing through the United States, thereby saving time and expense. About 175 miles of the road is now completed West from Winnipeg and is being pushed on, as we before stated at the rate of 2 miles per day and there is little doubt but that those desiring to do so, will be able before long to get on board the cars at Markdale and go right through to the Rocky Mountains without change of cars. Mr. Sproule returned to Winnipeg on Tuesday last, taking his family with him.

CHURCH COLLECTIONS.

The Bible mode of collecting for the saints, is, that each worshiper should contribute every Sabbath a sum in proportion to his ability. The place of offering is at the door of the church, and the time immediately upon entering the building. There should be one or more men to sit by and guard the plate into which the people cast their money when they are passing into the house of God.—Jesus occupied this position when he beheld the multitude who put their money into the sacred treasury. The rich cast in much, and the poor widow cast in two mites. Were this mode of gathering the people's contributions retained and adhered to strictly, we would hear and see much less of church debts and church mismanagement. The whole system however has been cast out ignominiously. People have been alienated from it, and it may take many generations before the church can resume it. Moses may introduce it, Jesus may sanction it, Paul may recommend it, but the church of to-day will not have it.

And what has the church instead of her Bible mode? Well, she has another comprehensive system which can be modified in various ways, such as pew-rents, subscription lists, church-fair, bazaars, tea-parties, and pic-nics. She is not thus confined to one single mode. She can employ various modifications of these several methods; and variety is pleasing. But these and all such like methods are of the earth earthy. They have been introduced into the Church by a certain Mr. Worldly Wiseman, who crept in unawares among the saints long ago. His descendants and followers are to-day to be found in every congregation. They cling faithfully, in some form or other, to the principle or ground idea of the system of their leader, Mr. Worldly Wiseman The principle requires that every man who gives anything for Church purposes, shall have his name, and lump sum contributed, upon a permanent record, so that all men may see how much he gives, and may make comparisons between his giving and their own. If any man contributes a very large sum, the principle demands that his name should be published in all the newspapers, and his praises proclaimed in all the churches. There is no doubt but that the principle underlying Mr. Worldly Wiseman's system was given, or at least suggested, to him by the Devil, who is the father of many wicked inventions. It is amazing how soon the Church adopted the idea, carried it into practice, built upon it, and perfected Mr. Wiseman's system in all its varieties. Nothing, indeed, can be more wonderful, unless it be how speedily and completely the Church cast out her own God-given system as a thing to be reviled. The Bible plan is too simple, too unselfish, too modest, for this age of progress, railways and mortgages. Why, by Scripture method, a man might put $10 a Sabbath into the plate, and the world would never hear a word about it. What a world of praise the liberal donor would lose!—Such a contribution would amount to $520 a year. What mortal in this age of newspapers and telegraphs, could afford to lose the well merited laudation due to such unbounded liberality! But lose it he certainly would, if the Church returned to her primitive simplicity.

There is a new system which has been recently introduced by a certain worthy gentleman by the name of Mr. Jacob Compromise. His aim seems to be to form a coalition between the followers of the Bible system and those of Mr. Wiseman. The system of Mr. Compromise combines many points selected from the other two.—From the Bible plan it takes the idea of giving weekly, on the Sabbath, in the church. So far, it harmonizes exactly with the views of St. Paul. It is, therefore, calculated to win the favor of his moderate followers. But in order to suit the views of the Wiseman party, it provides that the name of every contributor, and the amount contributed each Sabbath, shall be entered on a permanent record, so that the sum total may appear at the end of the year, and may be published. The liberal "cheerful giver," may thus receive his meed of praise. He may also have the opportunity of comparing his own large hearted liberality with the liberality of brethren whose hearts are more contracted, or whose fortunes are less affluent. The system is thus an eclectic one. It is not altogether scriptural, nor altogether earthy, but a combination of both. Like coalition movements generally, it has dropped the old names, and adopted the title of the envelope system. Wherever it has been introduced and carried out, it has proved to be very successful; and many good people believe it to be a grand step in the right direction, as they think, towards the simplicity of the Scripture mode. Those who have tried both plans, are clearly of opinion, judging from results, that Mr. Jacob Compromise must be a wiser man than Mr. Worldly Wiseman.

FOOLED ONCE MORE.

MR. EDITOR.—The most of people relish a good story, provided it be a truthful one. Tales of adventures, daring, heroism, dangers of the deep battles, &c., all have their charms. Who amongst us could read the adventures of Robinson Crusoe half way through, and not have a desire to to know the end of it. We confess being of this class. Now, the first thing we do when we recieve our weekly newspaper, is to hurriedly glance through it and pick out what we consider the most important items. These are generaly distinguished by their headings; but you don't catch us trusting any longer to these glaring impositions. We could laugh at being fooled once or twice, but to get caught a third time is our reason for remonstrating, Two or three weeks since we got to reading what we thought was a very nice story in one of our Toronto weeklies, and towards the end it informed us about St. Jacobs Oil; we only laughed and said humbug. The week following we noticed another heading, how Mark Twain entertained a visitor. Well, thinking we might learn a little Etiquette in case Mark should take a fancy to send us an invitation, we read it, but by St. Patrick if they didn't finish by making Mark introduce St. Jacobs Oil. Well confound it, we exclaimed, but they have got another dose of that St. Jacobs Oil on us again, determined not to be caught so simple next time; but now, Sir, I admit the corn; along comes our Toronto Mail on Thursday, down we sat, and almost the first thing that caught our eye was the adventures of Capt. Paul Boynton, it appeared quite interesting; it told how he had bumped up against sharks, &c. At this point we began to feel a little incredulous because from our knowledge of these gentry, they would relish the Capt. alive or dead all the same. However, determined to learn some more of his exploits, we read a little further, when—O, well, it don't matter what we said, you can't find it in any of the Dictionaries, I'm—lashed if the Capt'n wasn't oiling himself all over with St. Jacobs Oil, it may be, the more easily to evade the sharks for we made no further search, our curiosity was satisfied. Now, Mr, Editor, in order to fool us again, it will require to be printed wrong end up. We have made up our mind to look out for anything and everything inthe shape of St. or Saint attatched to their name.

INVITATION TO ACQUIRE A BUSINESS EDUCATION.

I have volunteered to spend the long winter evenings to the advantage of my fellow colleagues in Markdale.

I guarantee a thorough set of lessons and lectures.

In addition to the night school, there will be organized a first-class literary society, based on a conveniet constitutional order (officers to be elected from the members), held once a week, in which readings, dramas (of a moral nature). parliamentary addresses, debates, spelling matches, the writing of essays, and the art of elocution, will be both taught and practiced. In fact a real literary training and intellectual feast awaits all who will take an interest. Only enough fees to pay expenses are requisite. Come the first night free, Wednesday 23rd inst., 7:30 p. m., Dufferin Hall. —Never let the fun drop.

The sentence was the lightest the Police Magistrate could inflict, and was done in consideration of Dilworth acknowledging his guilt, and thereby saving the court the trouble of proving it.

PLACING OBSTRUCTIONS ON THE RAILWAY.—Two young men belonging to this town were brought up before justice Proctor on Tuesday last, charged with placing obstractions on the track on Sunday. It seems that some boys were taking a ride on a hand car and the others for fun, put some sticks along the rails to give the hand car a bounce. Mr. Holden, station master prosecuted, but said as this was a first offence he did not wish to press the matter severely. The boys got off by paying a fine. This will severe as a warning to all against engaging insuch pranks on the Railway. The law is very severe in such cases and any one found guilty of putting obstruction on a Railway can be sent to penitentary. —Ib,

NEWSPAPERS, BY TALMAGE.

Mr. Talmage had something to say about newspapers on Sunday. Said he:—"A good newspaper is the grandest temporal blessing that God has given to the people of this century. The theory is abroad that anybody can make a newspaper with the aid of a capitalist. The fact is that fortunes are swallowed up every year in the vain effort to establish newspapers, most of which die of cholera infantum. (Laughter.) To publish a newspaper requires the skill, precision, and boldness of a commander-in-chief. To edit a newspaper one needs to be a statesman and a geographer and so far as all acquisition is concerned, encyclopædic. If you have a notion to start and publish a newspaper take it for granted that you are threatened with softening of the brain. Take your pocketbook and throw it into your wife's lap. Rush up to Bloomingdale asylum and surrender yourself before you do something desperate. (Laughter.)

ANSWER TO MANY CORRESPONDENTS.

In reply to our numerour injuries from our readers, concerning the wonderful quality of the Great German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil,—mentioned in our last issue,—we would inform them that the article may be obtained from our retail druggists, or by their aid. Ask for St. Jacobs Oil, and if the dealer does not keep it in stock, he will be able to procure it in a few days from the wholesale house We understand there is existing an immense demand for the remedy, which is not so very surprising when it is considered what it is daily accomplishing in the way of relief and cures, bordering, in some instances, on the miraculous.

MARKDALE TOWN.

In Canada there is a town,
Of riches and great fame,
A place of pleasure and resort,
And Markdale is its name.

The beautiful large buildings
That grace every street,
Is something grand to look upon,
For its size, it can't be beat.

And just outside this little town
Such scenery you will see,
The Saugeen River flowing by
So smooth and peacefully,

And in the fishing season,
On its banks there may be found
Pleasure-parties with their hook and lines,
For in plenty fish abound,

And as farther up the stream you go
More scenery meets the eye,
And now the river swiftly flows
Like a cataract past you by.

Your thoughts are carried far away
As on its banks you stand,
It seems just like a paradise
With trees on either hand.

Now you that are with sorrow bent
And troubled in your mind,
Go wend your way far up that stream
And solitude you'll find.

There, all your sorrows pass away
As on the bank you stand,
And fancy carries you away
Up to that better land.

It acts gently and speedily in Billiousness, Costiveness, Headache, Sick Headache, Distress after Eating, Wind on the Stomach, Heartburn, Pains in the Side and Back, Want of Appetite, Want of Energy, Low Spirits, Foul Stomach. It invigorates the Liver, carries off all surplus bile, regulates the Bowels, and gives tone to the whole system.

Cut this out and take it to your Druggist and get a 10 cent Sample, or a large bottle for 75 cents, and tell your neighbor about it.

Mechanical Orguinette.

An Automatic Reed Organ.

"The Orguinette may now be called a celebrated instrument. In tone it is akin to the Cabinet Organ, but the organ must be manipulated by an artist in order to produce music; the ORGUINETTE is on the other hand entirely mechanical in its action, and at a trifling expense it can be made to furnish an unlimited supply of all kinds of music. —Toronto Globe."

"The Orguinette is indeed a musical wonder. It is a minature reed organ, with as strong and melodious a tone as the Cabinet Size. It surpasses the Cabinet Organ for the reason that the ignoramus in music can play it as well as the most accomplished professor. THE ORGUINETTE is strong and accurate in its mechanism, and consequently not liable to get out of order."—Montreal Gazette.

"The Orguinette is the most perfect automatic musical instrument yet invented; its repertorie is unlimited, the tone is remarkably good."—Montreal Star.

At a fashionable wedding in New York, the organist having been requested to "play something appropriate" upon the entry of the bride and groom, brought out in the organ's loudest tone "She's Fooling Thee."

If the parties who expressed there doubts as to my having sold over a thousand dollars worth of watches since my return from Switzerland will call at my store in Flesherton, I shall be pleased to show them my books and prove the statement.—W. F. DOLL.

Great inconvenience is felt in this village on account of the cutting off of all communication between the village and station by wire, caused by closing up the Dominion Telegraph Office. We think it would have been nothing more than reasonable had the Montreal Co. given connection, as the wire passes the office. The expense would have been very trifling, and at the same time they would have gained the gratitude of our people.

"Must say it's the nicest thing I ever used for the teeth and breath," says everyone having tried "TEABERRY" the new toilet gem. Get a 5ct. sample.

To preserve the eyesight get a pair of Mr. Doll's pebble glasses.

USE "Castorine" Machine Oil, for all kinds of machinery, it is also excellent for harness and leather, making it water and weather proof. For sale by dealers.

ON Tuesday last, Mr. A. McDougal took us through his portion of the new brick block erected this summer in conjunction with Mr. John Reid. The banking office we have already described. The other portion of the first flat we believe Mr. McDougal will occupy as a harness shop. The second and third flats are intended for dwelling purposes. There is ample accommodation for two families. There is a parlor in each division, one called the Butternut room and the other the Cherry room, which are finished in oil. On this flat are also kitchen, pantry, dining room, &c. The third is arranged for sleeping apartments. The bedrooms are large and airy, and several have large clothes-closets attached Take it altogether the building is a credit to our village and we do not think its equal can be found in any village in our Dominion, and in very few towns. W. D. McLeod was the architect and superinteded the whole work, and it is a credit to him. The mason work and plastering was done by John Hanbury, and he need never take a back seat in his line. We will give a description of the Reid portion next week.

Wilcox has got the most complete stock of jewelry ever brought to this section of the country. See it.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Habitual Constipation, Biliousness, Liver or Kidney Affections, the safest and best remedy is Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, the great family medicine. They can with perfect safety be given to the youngest child as they are purely vegetable in composition and mild in their action. Sold in large panel bottles at 50 cents A. TURNER & Co. special agents for Markdale.

REMOVED.—William Lucas & Co., this week removed their Banking office to the McDougal portion of the new brick Block erected by Reid & McDougall, this summer. We do not think there is any private banking institution in Canada can boast of a nicer office. The counter in the main office is of a semi-circular form, of hard wood, built by E. Purvis, and finished in oil, as is also all the wood work. In the rear is the private office of Mr. Lucas, Manager, which is capacious, well lighted, and well ventilated. This bank has branches in Flesherton and Dundalk, and all appear to be doing a rushing business. Although Mr. Lucas has resided amongst us but a short time, he has by his courteousness and affability made himself one of the most popular men in our village, and the managers of the Flesherton and Dundalk branches, Messrs. McPherson and E. G. Lucas, are no whit behind him in popularity. To wish them success would be superfluous, as they have attained that already.

MANUFACTURERS of reapers, mowers and threshing machines, prefer "Castorine" machine oil to any other, it will out wear lard, seal, or elephant, and is warranted not to gum.

ALMOST A SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—While Mr. J. Brownridge's sawing machine was at work on the farm of John Herron, 9th con., Artemesia, the saw by some means getting out of the guide struck Mr. Herron on the arm, but from the promptitude of Mr. Brownridge seizing the saw it was prevented from severing the limb from the body. Mr. Brownridge got badly cut about the face. With careful attention both parties are likely soon to recover.—[Com.]

... Raisins, Sugar and ... will find that McFarland no ... in town is behind. His ... stock of Dry Goods, Crockery, and Glassware, would tax any man in the Dominion to surpass.

Mr. Browne, the photographer, is on hand and will be prepared to take photographs the first of next week, up stairs in the new Standard office.

Watches, Clocks, Chains, Charms, Brooches, Eardrops, Bracelets, Engagement and Wedding Rings, Cuff Pins, Scarf pins, Solitaires, Casters, Butter coolers, Pickle dishes, Knives, Forks, Spoons, &c., &c., at Wilcox, the jeweller's.

—W. J. McFarland is receiving and opening out new goods every day.—25 boxes of Axes, one case of Saws, Hand and Crosscut, Ropes, Nails, Glass, Scissors, Horse Nails, Broadaxes, Lanterns, and hammers, opened and marked off cheap this week.

Mr. A. M. Eakin, started Thursday morning on a visit to his parents in Leeds Co. He was presented with a purse and address on the eve of his departure by the villagers. We wish him a safe journey and an improvement in his health. Particulars of presentation next week.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY,

For Winnipeg, one car load of Turkeys, Geese, Ducks, and Chickens, well cleaned, and no food in crop.—Highest price paid by W. J. McFarland.

Mr. Wilcox is, this week, removing to the portion of Hills block just vacated by the Bank, on Mill street, opposite the Post Office, where he will be found as usual at his post. His new premises are much larger than the old one, and he will be enabled to make a better display of his large stock of jewellery, plated ware, &c.

And don't you forget it, we sell cheaper than any other house in Town—Reynolds & Son.

The whistle of the Foundry is now heard regularly, and everything will be ready in a few days for active service. The Moffat brothers are first class Mechanics, and energetic and industrious young me. We can therefore bespeak for them the best of success.

How is it I never look so neat as you do, Jim? I spend as much as you do for clothes. Simply because I get my Clothing, Hats, Ties, Boots and Gloves at McFarland's, and you do not, Bob.

If you want to get Boots, just call at Reynolds & Son, the cheapest stock of Boots and Shoes in town.

The International Wheat Exchange.

1881-2.

OPEN TO LIVE FARMERS EVERYWHERE.

The CERTAIN BENEFITS—Again I say CERTAIN BENEFITS—to be derived from the prompt patronage of this movement have been opened to live farmers everywhere.

I want no one to invest a dollar—more or less—in it, who has the slighest fear that it will be a bad investment of that dollar—more or less.

As shown by my late edition (5500 copies) of "Traveller," (my own journal, which, see for September and November, 1881). This movement was inaugurated for the benefit in Canada, of the 40,000 "LONDON MUTUAL" MEMBERS and through them for the country at large, and for the farmers of the States of the West.

MEMBERS OF THE "LONDON MUTUAL" OF CANADA.

I tried to keep it for you, but finding the movement POPULAR EVERYWHERE, and the current clamor that it should be made as broad in its application in Canada as was probosed for the farmers of the States in the West. I finally yielded to the advice of many of my warmest, old-time friends of maturer years than myself, by opening it to the world.

Having done so, I have lived for the past month almost sleepless, to create for "International Wheat Exchange" AN IMMORTAL LIFE. I have found it necessary to delay my leaving for the West for a few weeks, in order to form CANADIAN CONNECTIONS at various points throughout the Dominion, with proper men to represent and receive orders through my movement. I have made such connections through Grey and Bruce, and now go West.

W. J. M'FARLAND, ESQ.,

has kindly undertaken to receive orders, and make delivery of Western grain for me, at MARKDALE. Orders must be promptly given by all who wish to be thus benefitted. Before November 15th, current, I shall send Mr. MCFARLAND and the other Canadian representatives of INTERNATIONAL WHEAT EXCHANGE, so far as appointed, samples of all the best flouring spring wheats (already collected and coming in) from the best wheat producing sections of Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Dakota and Wisconsin.

MY AIM BEING TO INTRODUCE INTO EACH DISTRICT, ONLY SUCH GOOD FLOURING VARIETIES AS WILL BE SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR THE SOIL OF EACH LOCALITY, my arrangements in the west have been made accordingly. Every farmer can, therefore, order intelligently from the samples sent to Canada, which will be labelled as follows:—

Name of Wheat ....
Name of Grower ....
Where Grown.......... Section ....
Township.......... Range..........
Nature of Soil..........
Average yield per acre..........
How long grown there..........
Signed..........
Agent.

Thousands of such labelled specimens are now awaiting my arrival in Iowa.

I have lived for three months under

A VERITABLE VOLCANO OF THOUGHT

In order to make my International Wheat Exchange a sure success for all who patronize it; to make it result so that I can look back from future years upon it with PERFECT SATISFACTION. I shall, therefore, carry it to a successful issue, honorably and well for the benefit of all who ... Good wishes and hopes for my success are kind, BUT WILL NOT MOVE WHEAT. I shall move NO MORE ... than I have orders for at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on December 15th, next. I shall move nothing ... but the ... FLOURING VARIETIES. In order to have Western grown wheat ... CANADA, I shall have with me through the West one of the CELEBRATED 1ST PRIZE FANNING MILLS, from the Factory of R. H. McKay, Walkerton, Ont., which, from the several severe tests I have given it, I know will not disgrace Canada ANYWHERE ON EARTH.

I look forward confidingly for a noble patronage of INTERNATIONAL WHEAT EXCHANGE from the Wheat Growers of this continent in order to make it as eminent a success (before I sit down to next Chistmas' dinner) as my circulation of the "WHITE RUSSIAN" and "Lost Nation" has been for the miller and consumer and profitable to the producer.

Elsewhere in this and next issue will be found a few of the HOME AND CONTINENTAL ECHOES I have had speaking for themselves.

Having the originals of hundreds of just such kindly and assuring echoes from across this continent, there shall not—cannot—be any failure, ON MY PART, to make the INTERNATIONAL WHEAT EXCHANGE a glorious success.

THE MOVEMENT NOW LIVES THROUGH FIVE STATES OF THE WEST.—A SURE SUCCESS! ITS FUTURE IN THE DOMINION OF CANADA DEPENDS ENTIRELY UPON THE FAVOR OF THE PEOPLE NOW. CHAS. T. DOYLE, Manager of the International Wheat Exchange, Walkerton, Ontario, and Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts., or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, sweet and healthy.

The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

AN OLD MAN EIGHTY YEARS OLD FIRES A BARN AND TRIES TO END HIS LIFE.

JARVIS, Ont., Nov. 10.—Andrew Ward, an old man 80 years of age, has been living for a year past with Jas. Ross, his nephew, a farmer, residing two miles from this village. At a division court, held here yesterday, the old man sued Ross for wages which he claimed for work during the past year. His claim was not sustained. About 10 o'clock last night one of Ross's barns was destroyed by fire, together with the contents. After the fire Ross in company with two young men while passing the stables heard a strange noise, and upon opening the doors a horrible sight presented itself. The old man stood near one of the stalls with a rope around his neck, the end of which he had fastened to his cane and with this he was twisting and tightening the strap evidently endeavouring to take his own life. His throat was cut and his face fearfully swollen. Ross and the two young men who found him took the strap from his neck when he staggered to the ground in an almost helpless condition. A jackknife covered with blood was found in one of his pockets, and no doubt this was the instrument with which he had attempted to cut his throat. The wound is about two inches in length but not deep. He is generally suspected of having set fire to the barn, but makes a positive denial of having done so. He admits having been in the barn that evening and says he drove some cows out, fastened the doors, and came away. Ross had no insurance on the barn nor contents. It contained nearly his whole crop of grain. The loss is estimated at about $1,000.

HUMBUGGED AGAIN.—I saw so much said about the merits of Hop Bitters, and my wife who was always doctoring, and never well, teased me so urgently to get her some I concluded to be humbugged again; and I am glad I did, for in less than two months use of the Bitters my wife was cured and remained so for eighteen months since. I like such humbugging.—H. T., St. Paul.—Pioneer Press.

A FEMALE SHARPER.

One of the shrewdest and boldest tricks ever played on a jeweller was done by a woman of nerve in Cincinnati not long ago. One day a middle-aged woman, of fine personal appearance, well dressed, and of most attractive manners, called at a private lunatic asylum and asked to see the superintendent. That official met her in the parlor.

"I wish to make arrangements for the confinement of a patient here," she said. "What are your terms and the conditions on which you receive your inmates?"

"Our terms are $15 per week, and you must have the certificate of two physicians.'

'Very well,' said the lady, "I will [illegible] for two months in advance. The patient is my son, who is insane on the subject of diamonds. He has [illegible] for selling my jewellery. I have not yet gotten the certificate of the physicians with the authority.'

Then the lady entered her carriage and drove to a jewellery store. There she selected $4000 worth of jewellery, which she said was intended for the trousseau of her daughter, about to be married. She gave the name of a wealthy family recently arrived in Cincinnati, and said to the proprietor; "If you will let one of your clerks step into the carriage with me, I will go to my husband's store and give him the money for the goods.'

The proprietor consented and the clerk, with the goods in a box, entered the carriage with the lady, who said she wished to stop on the way and show her purchase to a friend. They drove to the asylum and were shown to the parlor. The superintendent entered and the lady said quite calmly, to the clerk: "Just open the box and show the things to the gentlemen.'

The clerk unsuspectingly complied. Carelessly drawing near, the lady suddenly seized the box and was walking out of the room with it when the astonished clerk cried:

"Hold on, madam! I must not let those goods go out of my sight until I get the the money?'

The lady did not deign to notice the clerk, but, turning to the superintendent of the asylum, she said:

"This is the young man I spoke to you about. He is getting a little violent. You had better secure him.'

It was in vain that the clerk protested that a robbery was being committed. The superintendent was inexorable. He called in assistance and secured the clerk, while the lady walked to her carriage with the $4000 worthy of jewellery.

WEAK LUNGS AND HOW TO MAKE THEM STRONG.

Breathe with the mouth closed, have access at all times to pure air exercise moderately, eat nourishing but simple food, and take that best of all cough remedies, Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, it speedily cures all throat and lung troubles of adults or children. Price 25 cents per bottle.

Some people will place a misconstruction upon everything! It is well known that President Garfield's life was insured for $25,000 in the New York Life Insurance company, and just because that company draped their building in mourning, and displayed a card reading: 'We mourn our loss,' some papers are giggling and trying to make something terribly funny out of the fact.

A REAL NECESSITY.

No house should be without a bottle of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, in case of accident. There is no preparation offered to suffering humanity that has made so many permanent cures, or relieved so much pain and misery. It is called by some the Good Samaritan, by others the Cure all, and by the afflicted an Angel of Mercy.

DYSPEPSIA.

That all prevalent disease of civilized life, is always attended with a disordered sympathetic system and bad secretions, and no remedy is better adapted to its cure than Burdock Blood Bitters taken according to special directions found on every bottle.

Man born of woman is of few days and full of a desire to assist some rich father-in-law to squander his quarterly dividends.

ALL SORTS.

"Six Girls" is the title of the latest novel. It is expected that a sequel entitled 'Our Broken Gate' will be issued soon.

Mr. Strauss, of Cincinnati, recently rescued two friends who fell in the water, thus proving the truth of the old saying—"Drowning men catch at Strauss.'

The strongest man living—the man who moves the house by his tears.—New York Book-keeper.—How about the farmer who moved a cord of wood by his steers?

An exchange speaks of "a male train.' The sex of trains has always been a matter of some doubt; but a train should not be called a male because it smokes and 'choos.'

A river is always down in its mouth.—Burlington Hawkeye. And it shouldn't be, considering that it generally controls all the banks along its course.

A POPULAR REMEDY.

Hagyards pectoral Balsam is one of the most deservedly popular remedies for the cure of coughs, colds, sore throat, asthma, whooping cough, croup, bronchitis, and all pulmonary complaints. For sale by all dealers.

If Ananias had lived in these days he would have passed for a simple, guileless old man.—Boston Post. 'Somebody promised to meet you at a certain place, and return the $5 he borrowed.'

All that is needed to sell mining stock is a water-colored map, two pieces of ore purchased at a jeweller's, a man with cheek, and a fool with money.

Whiskey, water, and a grain of strychnine was the compound put up by a Baltimore druggist and labelled: "Found at Last—Golden Stomach Tonic."

"WHAT EVERY ONE SAYS MUST BE TRUE."

And every one who has tested its merits speaks warmly in praise of Hagyards Pectoral Balsam as a positive cure for all throat and lung complaints, coughs and colds, sore throat, bronchitis, and incipient consumption.

The Toronto Evening News gives a digest of M. Delaunay's analysis of the claims of the respective sexes to superiority. The Frenchman's conclusion is that the female insect is the male's sovereign, but that as the range of nature ascends the female gradually falls behind. We admit the first part of that conclusion. But we contend there is no limitation; right up to the crowning specimen of insects, the human race, the fact is true, only in a much more complete way. That is where the evolution theory comes in. Why does a man at the bidding of his wife, who thinks she hears burglars around, feel it a mark of special favour that he should be delegated at midnight to go and chase a bob tailed cow over half a dozen vacant lots with an old barrel stave, and clothed in nothing but a little brief authority and a night shirt? What is the nameless leverage that makes him get up in the dead hour of the night and set the pancake-batter near the parlor stove? What the unseen motive which impels him to walk round with a squalling baby for an hour in the chill atmosphere of the room in the darkest time just before the dawn? The answer is, woman is man's soverign, spite of French investigations.—Mail.

There appears to be an epidemic of finding valuables in old trunks. Only a week or so ago a diamond was found by a laborer, an and old trunk sent to be repaired in New Haven, Conn., was found to contain in a small drawer a gold watch, $30 in gold, two gold bracelets and a diamond and pearl set. This reminds us that a trunk brought over in the Mayflower was being cut up for firewood by a Norristown man the other day when out rolled $600,000 in gold, two silk hats, a diamond, inlaid clock, four pairs of new boots, a camel's hair shawl, a set of solid silverware, a costly mirror, a suit of parlor furniture and a file of newspapers. The man who was demolishing the trunk said it formerly belonged to an editor.

SELECTED GRINS.

The London Truth says: "A clergyman in Scotland preached a few days ago from the text, If ye do not repent ye shall likewise perish." The wife of a farmer, who was present, went home and told her husband that the text was, 'If ye don't pay your rent you shall have to leave the parish."

An Irishman was asked at dinner whether he would take some of the apple-pie. "Is it houlsom?" enquired Teddy." "To be sure it is," was the reply. What makes you ask such a question?' "Because,' says the new-comer, "I once had an uncle killed with the apple-plixy, and I thought it might be something of that sort.'

Scene—a butcher's stand. Butcher: 'Come, John, be lively now; break the bones in Mr. William's chops, and put Mr. Smith's ribs in the basket for him.' John (briskly): 'All right, sir, just as soon as I've sawed off Mrs. Murphy's leg.'

THE TERRIBLE TYPHOON.—Hong Kong, Nov. 8.—A typhoon has ravaged western Tonquin. Two hundred churches, thirty-four parsonages and colleges and two thousand houses have been destroyed. Six thousand Christians have been ruined. The losses are immense; distress terrible.

WEATHER PROPHETS.

Whene'er a farmer must confess
That he has missed his weather guess,
The failure gives him no distress,
For ready is his reason;
When days are wet instead of dry,
He only needs to wink his eye,
And say, in accents sage and sly,
The signs all fail this season.

But when a weather guesser grows
Too boastful of his sleight of nose,
For juggling with rains and snows
In summer and in winter,
At once his ardent fancy sees
Vissions of honor and of fees,
And with his notes and theories
He rushes to the printer.

His vanity, too freely fed,
So far his errant brain has led,
That he predicts a year ahead
The atmosphere's commotions:
So, foolishly defying fate,
He pins his credit to a date,
And bids a doubting world await
The out comeof his notions.

Then when his firm convictions fail,
And sunshine comes instead of hail,
The cruel types still tell the tale,
And give the record of it.
The weather prophet tears the page,
And blames an unbelieving age,
That gives him but disgust and rage
For all his weather profit.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

And bowing low after this small stab and with a carcastic curl of his tawny mustached mouth, the captain of the Plungers rode away. He held the handsome, silver voiced, oily-tongued, Southerner in contempt and aversion —most men did—without exactly knowing why. There are men whom men like, and men whom women like and Mr. Dantree, happily for himself, was one of the latter.

A loud cry of 'There they come' proclaimed the arrival of the hounds. The huntsman as he passed cast surly glances toward Miss Dangerfield and one or two mounted ladies, with prophetic visions of their heading the fox and being in the way. The hounds were put into the gorse, and the pink coats began to move out of the field into the lane—Miss Dangerfield and her dark lover with them.

A loud 'Hallo' rang shrilly out, the hounds came with a rushing roar over a fence. 'There he is!' cried a score of voices, as the fox flew over the ground, and with a ringing shout Catherine Dangerfield flew along on black Ilderim, steady as a rock and upright as a dart. Her brilliant eyes was flashed now with the hunters fire —even Gaston Dantree was forgotten The roan flew along helter skelter beside Ilderim for a few minutes, then fell hopelessly behind, Mr. Dantree counted neither courage nor horsemanship among his many virtues. On and on like the wind—Ilderim flewthe fences—with a teremondous rush he leaped chasms and hedges, his dauntless rider taking everything before her. The master of the hounds himself looked at her in a glow of admiration —the black Arab flew over everything scorned to turn to the right or left, and after a brilliant burst of over an hour, the heiress of Scarswood had the triumph and delight of being one of the fortunate few in at the finish in time to see the dead fox held over the huntsman's head with the hounds hanging expectant around. She laughed—eyes and teeth flashing dazzlingly—as she recieved the brush from the huntsman, and the innumerable compliments from the gentlemen who crowded around the heorine of the hour.

'Yes,' she said, 'I can ride—about the only thing I can do. No, Mr. Dantree, I do not want a compliment from you, and I can't pay one either. Your roan baulked shametully, and you are the last man in. But to be late, as I have said before, on all occasions, is your normal state.'

'Being first in your regards I can bear the rest with philosophy, Miss Dangerfield. Fall back from those people, and rein in that black whirlwind of yours, and ride back to Langton Royals with me.'

She looked at him quickly—some tone in his voice, some look in his eye startled her.

'Gaston, something has pappened!'

'Yes—nothing to be alarmed about, however. Only this—I must go back to New Orleans.'

'Gaston!'

It was a sort of dismay cry. It he had ever doubted his power over her he would have been reassured now. The glad light died out of her face as she turned to him.

'Go back to New Orleans! Why should you go back? I thought—'

'You thought I never was going back any more. You thought this sort of pleasant existence—driving, hunting, singing, and being happy—taking no thought, like lilies of the field, etc., was to go on for ever. My dear little simple Kathie! you seem to forget that you are born to the purple, I am not. You forget that men must work women must weep. You forget that you are engaged to a beggar, who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow or brains. You forget in short that I am not the heiress of Scarswood, with eight thousand per annum, or Captain De Vere, next heir to peerage, but Gaston Dantree, Boheman, literary hack—only too thankful if his flimises for the New Orleans journals pay for the coat he wears and the bed he sleeps on. You forgot that, my dear, impetuous little girl, but, by Jove, I don't!'

'And what's all that got to do with it? Why can't things go on as they are? Why can't you stop at Morecanbe until—' Miss Dangerfield abruptly.

'Until our wedding day—is that what you mean, Kathie? Ah! but you see that seems such an indefinite period. Mr. Talbot was kind enough to invite me to run down to his place in Sussex for a week's August fishing, and I was to repay his hospitality by singing songs. August has passed, Octobdr is here, and—so am I still. And, unfortunately singing is such an unsubstantial mode of payment, even the finest tenor voice is apt to pall upon a Sussex squire, after three months incessant listening to it. I had a letter from New Orleans not a pleasant letter—and it comes to one of two things now, either to go back to Louisiana and resume my quill driving, or—' Mr. Dantree paused and looked at her—'or,' he repeated with that smile of his the baronet's romantic daughter thought the most beautiful on earth—'or Kathie?'

'Yes, Gaston?'

'Or you must marry me out of hand. Do you hear, Kathie?—take me for better or worse, and support me afterwards. This is what it comes to in plain English. One may be in love ever so deeply, but one must have three meals per diem and pay the tailor and boot-maker. I have just money enough to last two months and a half—I've been totting it up. After that the work house stares me in the face. I'll defy the minions of the newspaper, Kathie, if you say so, and I'll go to Castleford Arms and wait until the happy day comes that makes you all my own. If not—why then—' Mr. Dantree paused and produced his cigar case. 'You'll premit me, I know, Kathie? You're awfully sensitive on the subject of cigars, and I've been thinking so deeply ever since I got that confounded letter, that my brain—such as it is—is dazed. I need a smoke to support me under all this.'

Then there was silence while they rode on slowly in the rear of the hunting party—Mr. Dantree philosophically puffing his cigar, and Katherine, her cheeks flushed with very unwonted colour, and lips sealed with still more unwonted silence.

'Well,' he said, as the turrets and peaked gables of Langton Royals bore in sight 'I don't want to be importunate, my dear, but suspense isn't a pleasant thing. When a man is under sentence, the sooner he hears his doom and knows the worst, the better Am I to go to New Orleans, to risk all that may come to part us tor eyer, or am I to—'

'Stay, Gaston?'

Mr. Dantree drew a long breath of great relief. For one moment he had doubted—for one agonizing moment the eight thousand a year seemed trembling in the balance.

'My loyal little girl! I shall thank you for this when two score people are not looking on. I am to stay and send the New Orleans editors au diable and the wedding day will be—when Kathie? My princely fortune will keep me about two months, and allow me a new suit of clothes, I suppose, to be made happy in. When, Kathie—when—when—when?'

'Gaston, I don't know. It is so horribly sudden. Good Heavens! only two months! One can't prepare.'

'Oh, yes, one can. Import the trousseau from London or Paris. They'll send you on the thousand and one thing brides seem to require in a week. Be rational, Kathie; that object overruled. Name the next.'

'It is easily named. Papa will never consent.'

'Ah, now you have come to the hitch in the matter. I think it isvery likely the ancient warrior may put in his veto. But it is for you to over rule that. You're not the bright, clever little darling I give you credit for if you can't do it easily. In the bright lexicon of youth, you know, there is no such word as fail. You can do it, and you've got to do it your self, by Jove! I faced the music once, and I'd rather keep my countance averted from the melody for the future. He does the heavy father to perfection, and I never had a taste for private theatricals. Suppose I spare your blushes, and fix the day myself? Suppose I select New Year's eve? We couldn't wind up the old year in a jollier manner than by being married and enjoying ourselves in Paris for the rest of the winter. Come now, my darling, don't object. Bring the noble baronet round to reason, and make your Gaston the happiest man on this reeling globe on New Year's eve. Quick—oh, hang him! Here comes De Vere. Quick, Kathie; yes or no?'

'Yes.'

She had just time to flutter forth that one little word when the Captain of the Plungers Purple rode up on his gray charger to solict the second waltz at the ball that night.

'I used to write my name first on your list, Miss Dangerfield,' the capt. said, plaintively, 'but all that's over now,' with a glance at Dantree; 'and I must be resigned to my fate of second fidle.' Twas ever thus, etc. I trust hunting in this damp air has not impaired your voice for 'The Wine Cup is Sparkling,' Mr. Dantree?

They rode on to Langton Royals together—Katherine unusually silent She glanced furtively now and then at her two cavaliers. How much the handsome her loyer was. Such easy, negligent grace of manner; how well he talked; how well he sang; what a contrast Randolf Cromie Algernon De Vere, riding beside him, was, with his heavy, florid British complexion, his ginger whiskers, his sleepy blue eyes, and his English army drawl. He was the son of her dead peer, and the brother of a live one; but his nose was a pug, and his hand and feet were large and he had never thought, or said, or done a clever thing in his life.

'And papa wanted me to mary him!' Miss Dangerfield thought, with unutterable contempt; 'after seeing Gaston too! How impatient he is to have our wedding day fixed how he seemed to dread losing me. And people call him mercenary and a fortune-hunter. I shall speak to papa to-morrow, and he shall consent.'

The hunting party dined at Langton Royals. Miss Dangerfield's French maid had come over from Scarswood with her young lady's ball toilet, and when Mr. Dantree entered the brilliantly lighted ball-room and took a critical survey of his affianced wife, he was forced to confess that great happiness made the dark, sallow heiress of Scarswood very nearly handsome. She wore white—was she not a heroine and a bride elect?—a floating filmy robe of misty white, a crown of dark-green ivy leaves on her bright chestnut floating hair—all atwinkle with diamond dewdrops—her white shoulders rose exquisitely out of the foamy lace—her great, brilliant eyes had a streaming light, a faint flush kindled her dusk cheeks

'Have you noticed the little Dangerfield, Talbot?' Captain De Vere remarked to his friend, the squire of Morecambe. 'She's in great feather to-night, growing positively good looking, you know. See how she smiles on that shrewd little fellow, Dantree. Why can't we all be born with Grecian profiles and tenor voices? Seems a pity too she should be thrown away on a cad like that, such a trump of a girl as she is, and such a waltzer. Look at her now floating away with him. Clearest case of spoons I ever saw in my life.

Captain De Vere leaned against a pillar, pulled his leonine moustache, and watched Miss Dangerfield and her lover circling down the long room with gloomy eyes. It would have been contrary to all the principles of his life to fall in love—it was the proud boast of the Plungers that they never were guilty of that weakness, but still—oh, hang it all. Why couldn't that fellow keep his confoundedly handsome face and diabolically musical voice for transatlantic heiresses, and not come poaching on British manor? Why couldn't he marry a Yankee wife, who talked through her nose, and whose father had amassed a fortune selling groceries, and not mix the best blood in Sussex with the plebian puddle in his veins? Why couldn't she keep true to her order? Why didn't Sir John kick the fellow down-stairs when he had the audacity to demand his daughter's hand? Sir John the proudest old martinet in the army. A fine precedent to be set to the daughters of the county gentry—the son of a Yankee butcher or blacksmith lording it in Scarswood and taking his place among the patricians of Sussex, with the best blood in England in their veins, and an ancestry that ran back to the Conquest and Norman William.

'And the cad's a scoundrel, besides,' the captain thought, glowing with human ferocity; 'vain as a woman of his pretty face and voice, with no more affection for that sentimental, hero-worshipping little girl of seventeen than I have—not half so much, by George. She'll marry him and come to grief—the worst—mark my words.

The first waltz ended, the captain's turn came. The unusual exertion of thinking had fatigued the young officer's intellect; the physical exertion of waltzing with Miss Dangerfield would counteract it. And Miss Dangerfield was such a capital dancer, such a jolly little girl every way you took her. How she laughed, how she talked, what a clear, sweet, fresh, young voice she had, how bright were her eyes, how luxurious her brown, waving hair —not pretty, you know, like half the other girls in the room, with waxwork faces and china blue eyes, but twice as attractive as the prettiest of them—one of those girls whom men look after on the street, and ask their names—a siren with a sallow complexion and eyes of starry lustre.

'She's got brains, and the rest have beauty—I suppose that's about it—and beauty and brains never travel in company. She is far the cleverest little girl of my acquaintance, and if you notice it's always your clever women who marry good-looking fools. Egad! I wish I had proposed for her myself. Marriage is an institution I'm opposed to on principle. "Britons never shall be slaves," and so forth—and what's your married man but the most abjeect of slaves? I believe I've been in love with her all along and never knew it. "How blessings brighten as they take their flight." When I could have her I didn't want her; when a can't have her, I do.'

'Oh!' Katherine sighed, in ecstacy that was a delicious waltz. I was to be a ballet dancer, I believe—I could keep on for ever. Captain De Vere, you're the first heavy dragoon I ever knew who didn't disgrace himsel and partner when he attempted a round dance. Is that Mr. Dantree singing in the music-room? Yes, it is; and you have a soul attuned to the magic of sweet sounds—don't say no; I'm sure you have—so have I; come!'

Yes, Mr. Dantree was singing; that is what he was there for; his voice for the past ten years had been the open sesame that threw wide the most aristocratic circles, where he had never set foot. A little group of music lovers were around him, drinking in the melody of that most charming voice. Mr. Dantree was in his element—he always was when suorounded by an admiring crowd. This song was a Tyrolean warble, and the singer looked more like a nangel than ever, in a white waistcoat and tail coat.

'May Old Nick fly away with him!' growled Captain De Vere, inwardly, 'and his classic countenance, and Mario voice! What a blessing to society if he became a victim to small pox or chronic bronchitis! It's no wonder, after all, that little Kathie, a beauty-worshipper by nature, is infatuated. Well, my dear man, what is it?'

For a six-foot footman, in plush and knee breeches, had appeared suddenly and stood bowing before them.

'I beg your pardon, captain—it's Miss Dangerfield's maid as wishes to speak to Miss Dangerfield for an hinstant, hif hagreeable.'

'Ninon!' said Katherine—'what does she want?—where is she? Oh, I see her! Excuse me a moment, Captain De Vere?'

The French maid was standing just outside the door of the music-room, holding a small white parcel in her hand.

'Well, child,' her mistress said impatiently—the little French girl was five years her senior—'what do you want?'

'It's this parcel, mademoiselle; John Thomas found it on the floor of the gentlemen's cloak room, and he thinks it belongs to Mr. Dantree.'

'Indeed! But why does John Thomas think so?'

'Because mademoiselle, it is addressed to New Orleans, Will mademoiselle please take it and look?

Katherine took the little white package and looked at the address. Yes, beyond doubt, it was Gaston's hand:

'MLL MARIE DE LANSAC,
"Rue de———,
"New Orleans."

There was a moment's pause. The girl stood expectant—the young lady stood holding the package in her hand, looking strangely at the address. It was Gaston's writing, no doubt at all about that; and who was 'Mlle. Marie De Lansac,' of New Orleans, and what did this package contain? Letters, surely—and this hard cardlike substance, a photograph, no doubt. Mr. Dantree had told her his whole history, as she supposed, but no chapter headed "Marie De Lansac" had appeared. And as Katherine stood and looked, her lips set themselves in a rigid line, and a light not usually there nor pleasant to see, came into her gray eyes—the green light of jealousy.

'This package belongs to Mr. Dantree, Ninon; John Thomas was quite right. Here, tell him to—or no,' abrubtly, 'I'll give it to Mr. Dantree myself.'

The package was small, and her hand closed firmly over it, as she walked back to the music-room. Mr. Dantree had just finished his Tyrelean chorus, and was smiling and graciously receiving compliments. He made his way to Katherine's side and drew her hand within his arm, as one who had a right.

'My dear child,' he said, 'what has happened now? why, oh why, that face of owl-like solemnity? What's gone wrong?'

The large, crystal-clear, honest gray eyes were fixed on his face keenly.

'Yes, my love,' he said, 'what is it?'

'Gaston!' abruptly and with energy, 'did you ever tell a lie?'

'Hundreds, my darling,' responded Mr. Dantree, with promptitude; 'thousands, millions, and likely to do so again. What an absurd question! Did I ever tell a lie? It sounds like the catechism. As if any man or woman lived that didnt tell lies!'

'Speak for yourself,' the girl said, coldly; 'I don't, and I can't conceive of any man or woman of honor doing so. You see Captain De Vere there?'

'I'm thankful to say I do not at this moment—military puppy!'

'Military puppy he may be—falsehood teller, I know he is not; he is incapable of falsehood, dishonour or deceit.'

'Like the hero of a woman's novel, in short,' sneered Gaston Dantree, 'without fear and without reproach. My dear child, men and women who never tell lies exist in books 'written with a purpose,' and nowhere else. But what are you driving at, my severe little counsel for the prosecution? Let's have it without further preface.'

You shall, Mr. Dantree. Who is Marie De Lansac?'

Mr. Dantree was pastmaster of the polite art of dissimulation; no young duke born to the strawberry leaf coronet could be more unaffectedly nonchalant than he. His handsome olive face was a mask that never betrayed him. And now, with a start so slight as to be scarcely perceptible, with so faint a paling of the dark face that she failed to see it, he turned to her, calm and cool as ever.

'Marie De Lansac? Well, I know a young lady of that name in New Orleans. Who is she, you ask? She's grand-daughter of a French gentleman of that city, and I gave her singing lessons once upon a time. My dear little Kathie, don't annihilate me with those flashing gray eyes of yours. There isn't any harm in that, is there? There's no need of the green-eyed monster showing his obnoxious claws.'

He met her suspicious gaze full, and discovered for the first what an intensely proud and jealous nature he had to deal with. He was chill with undefined fear, but he smiled down in her face now with eyes as clear and innocent as the eyes of a child.

'Is this all? she asked, slowly; 'or is it one of the many lies you find it so necessary to tell?'

'On my honor, no; it is the truth; as if I could speak anything else to you. But how, in Heaven's name, Kathie, did you ever hear of Marie De Lansac?'

She did not reply; she still held the package; she still looked at him distrustfully.

'You gave her singing lessons, this Miss De Lansac?' slowly. 'She is young, I suppose?'

'She is.'

'Handsome, no doubt?'

'Well, yes, she's handsome—not the style I admire, though.'

HUMBUGGED AGAIN.—I saw so much said about the merits of Hop Bitters, and my wife who was always doctoring, and never well, teased me so urgently to get her some I concluded to be humbugged again; and I am glad I did, for in less than two months use of the Bitters my wife was cured and remained so for eighteen months since. I like such humbugging.—H. T., St. Paul.—Pioneer Press.

A scholar who had "been over to the map of Asia,' was reviewed by his teacher, with the following result?

Teacher—"What is geography?,, Scholar—"A big book.'
Teacher—"What is the earth composed of?'
Scholar—"Mud.'
Teacher—"No; land and water.'
Scholar—"Well, that makes mud, don't it?'
Teacher—"What is the shape of the earth?'
Scholar—"Flat.'
Teacher—"You know better! If I should dig a hole through the earth, where would I come out?'
Scholar—"Out of the hole.'

Maiden lady quotation slightly altered from an old aphorism. "Where singleness is bliss, 'tis folly to be wives.

HUMOROUS.

An old maid, not attractive, recently read in a temperance lodge an original poem entitled, "the lips that touch liquor shall never touch mine," and the young men present gave her three cheers.

The female editor of the Chicago Signal, with all the characteristic inquisitiveness of temperance, says she has lifted the cover off the pails of hundreds of country people in order to satisfy herself that no champagne or beer was hidden away in their recesses. It is a pity none of the owners of the pails shut the covers on her porboscis for her impudence.

"Lay off your overcoat or you won't feel it when you go out,' said the landlord of a Western inn to a guest who was sitting by the fire. "That's what I'm afraid of,' returned the man. "The last time I was here I laid off my overcoat. I didn't feel it when I went out and I havn't felt it since.'

"I can't hold this baby any longer,' called out the young husband father; "Pshaw Edward,' replied a muffled voice from the other side of the room; "You used to hold me for hours and never complain, and baby is but a feather compared to what I was.' "I was a fool!' said Edward. And she was too sleepy to dispute with him.

An old Irish soldier who prided himself upon his bravery, said he had fought in the battle of "Bull Run.' When asked if he retreated and made his escape as others did on the occasion, replied, "Be jabers, those that didn't run are there yit!'

"If I am not home from the party to-night at ten o'clock,' said a husband to his better and bigger half, 'don't wait for me.' "That I won't," replied the lady significantly. 'I won't wait, but I'll come for you.' The gentleman returned at ten precisely.

"You have been in swimming again, you rascal. Don't lie; I see your wet hair and your shirt turned wrong side out.' "There's no danger, mother, I can always touch bottom.' "So can I.' Mother grasps slipper. Tableau.

"I'm a very sick man,' observed the tramp languidly, as he anchored himself at a restaurant table. "The doctor says I must have strengthening food, give me something with plenty of iron in it." The waiter shaded the corners of his mouth with his hands and then bellowed in stentorian tones: 'One keg of nails!'

At Lewiston, Ill., a temperance detective persuaded William Standard to procure from the drug store of his son a small quantity of whiskey. When the old gentleman learned the object of the purchase, he dropped dead with excitement.

A WOMAN IN HIS ROOM.

"One day,' remarked Mr. Wilson, of the Girard Hotel, Philadelphia, "a fellow came into the hotel and said: I want a room.' He was in a great hurry, and I thought something was the matter. He wrote his name in the register and said he wanted to go up right away. I called a bell boy, but, instead of going up the front stairs, he slipped around back, met a lady, and took her up with him, Soon the boy returned and told me the man had a woman in his room. I sent for him quickly.

"'What are you doing with a woman in your room?'

"'Nothing; I only took her up there to wait,' the fellow replied, trembling all the time like a criminal.

"'Is she your sister?'

"'No.'

"'Mother?'

"'No.'

"'Daughter?'

"'No.'

"'It is against the rules of the house, Sir, to permit such conduct, and unless the lady is your wife she cannot stay in the room with you,' I said sharply.

"But—but—' was all the fellow could say, and he caught nervously at the desk in his fright.

"In an instant it dawned on me what was the matter,' said Mr. Wilson, "and I called the fellow to one side and whispered in his ear: 'You come to town to get married, didn't you?'

"Yes—yes,' he replied eagerly.

"Well, now, you can confide in me and I'll help you,' I replied.'

"You see I never was married before, and I don't know anything about it,' the fellow said: 'and I do wish you'd get somebody to tie the knot. That's my gal up stairs, and she's a-waitin' for me.'

"All right,' I replied; 'I'll fix you.'

"Magistrate List was sent for, and he put them through in double quick time. They paid for the room and then went off up Chestnut street to hunt a confectionary store.

PAYING PHYSICIANS.

It is the custom of the Chinese to pay their physicians when they are well and stop their supplies when they are sick. A London dust contractor some time since tride the Chinese plan. In his will be bequeathed $2,000 to his doctor, the legacy to be paid on condition that the testator lived two years after making the will; if he lived four years the sum was to be increased to $3,000 As the dust man, however, died within a week from the manufacture of the testament the doctor got nothing, though his patient left a personality of £120,000, to say nothing of the reality. London Truth says that this plan was successful in the case of the late Duke of Queensbury. He paid two physicians a certain sum per week for keeping him alive and in his senses. He died at 85 from a sufeit of fresh fruit, which the physicians must have looked upon as a gross if not a leagally actionable fraud upon themselves. This is the old Duke who thus wrote to George Augustus Selvin, Bishop of Lichfield, a principal of Eton, and a scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge, who was the first Bishop of New Zealand, and who is a man of varied acquirements and solid parts: "This is just the house which you would wish to be in. There is an excellent library, a good parson, the best French and English cookery you ever tasted, old wine strong coffee, and half-crown whist."

It appears, however, they had a spy in the camp, one Rev. E. Ransford, said to be an Episcopal minister, who took notes and furnished a full report to the Globe. THE EXAMINATION FRAUDS.

The examination, by Dr. Hodgins, Deputy Minister of Education, into the irregularities in connection with the Intermediate Examinations, which has been going on at Owen Sound for the past two weeks, was brought to a close on the 22nd inst. To give a detailed account of the proceedings would occupy more space than we have at our disposal; suffice it to say, that the result has proved that these examinations have been conducted, for some time past, in a very loose and unsatisfactory manner. It was proved that the examination papers had been tampered with; that bogus papers had been substituted for the original ones, and various other irregularities. We give below Dr. Hodgin's remarks at the close of the trial, which we copy from the Toronto Mail:—

"Dr. Hodgins,—In closing the enquiry, the most painful part of this painful case were the revelations which had been made of violations of honor on the part of the pupils concerned.—He then enumerated several points which the evidence had established, among them being that the answers of the candidates in 1877 and 1881 had not been properly secured, and that reasonable care had not been exercised in obtaining for them places of temporary deposit, the safety of which was unquestioned; that access had been fraudulently obtained to these papers in the years named in the absense of a proper sense of personal responsibility in the absolute security of these answers; that fraudulent access has been had the answers of the candidates of the intermepiate examination of 1881, and the result has been the extensive abstraction of some papers and the substitution of others in the mathematical group; that there is a remarkable coincidence in a considerable portion of the subject matter of instruction given to the Lantin class on Thursday and Friday of the examination week and the printed questions on which the candidates were examined on the Saturday of that week; that the copying of notes, prompting of each other, surreptitious passing of papers, and other irregularities among the candidates were indulged in by a considerable number of them, only a few of them were detected and punished; that at least two persons were dismissed for improper practices at the examination were, one within the year, and the other within three months, reported as having been awarded third class certificates; that the practice of copying from notes, prompting each other, and passing papers by so many pupils in high and public schools as brought out in the official erquiries of 1877 rnd 1881 has caused feelings of grave apprehension for the future of these pupils; this exhibition of dishonesty is especially to be deplored in the case of such of them as have aspired to the honorrble profession of teaching.

IN MEMORIAM.

We have this week to chronicle the death of one of Upper Canada's (Ontario) early pioneers, a race that are now fast passing away to "that bourne from whence no traveller returns."—Most of our readers are only too familiar with the trials incident to pioneer life; but in the days to which we refer there was no frontier settlement from which to draw supplies, nor obtaint remunerative wages for their labor during the harvest season, as was the case in our own early settlement. The pioneers to which we refer were the men who moulded our present laws, and laid the foundation-stone of the monumental greatness of our Dominion; and we trust their memory will be long remembered by an appreciative public.

MAURICE WURTS, the subject of this sketch, was born in the State of New Jersey, in the year 1798, and in the year 1802, his parents removed to Upper Canada; but whether voluntarily, or by reason of the confiscation of their property by the American Government—a custom cruelly practiced by the Americans of that day—we have no means of ascertaining. They landed at Little York (Toronto), and settled in the vicinity of what is now Markham Village; and they, in common with all other United Empire Loyalists, received grants of land from the British Government. When quite a young man he married a daughter of Christian Warren, Esq., long a Justice of the Peace in Niagara, also one of the noble U. E; Loyalists, and settled in the township of Chingacousey, County of Peel, and was the first man who drove a waggon team west of the point were Streetsville now stands. His wife preceded him to the "long, long home" three years ago; and since that time the subject of this memoir has resided with his son, Joel Wurtz, Esq., at Lockport Farm, in the Tyrone neighborhood, Artemesia, where he passed peacefully away "to the better land" on the 23rd ult., deeply regretted by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. May his ashes rest in peace.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

The following is the address presented to Mr. Eaton upon his departure from Markdale, and his reply thereto:

A. W. Eaton, Esq

DEAR SIR,—We have learned with regret that you are about to leave our Village, to reside in another section of the country; therefore, we embrace this opportunity of presenting you with this token of the respect and esteem in which you are held by the people of Markdale.

Your generous disposition, gentlemanly conduct, and estimable social qualities, have endeared you to us by ties of affection that will not readily be severed.

Wherever you may locate, or in whatever line of life you may be engaged, rest assured you shall always carry with you our best wishes for your prosperity and welfare.

Please accept the accompanying purse, not esteeming its intrinsic value as worthy of consideration, but only the friendly spirit which prompted the gift; and believe us ever, yours truly, T. S. SPROULE, T. MULLARKY, JOHN WELSH, T. HILL, on behalf of the others.

To T. S. Sproul, T. Mullarky, John Welsh, T. Hill, et al:

GENTLEMEN,—This sudden and unexpected compliment, with your presence, has so taken me by surprise, that I am at a loss to find language sufficiently expressive to convey to you my heartfelt thanks for this kindly expression of your friendship and generosity.

Associated as I have been with you for many years, in the pursuits and engagements of life, and endeared to you by the very strongest ties of affection, at this juncture, I find it impossible to sever my connection with you without experiencing the deepest feelings of regret.

The friendly sentiments contained in your complimentary and sympathetic address, shall ever be remembered by me with pride and pleasure, as significant of the estimable friends I have left behind in Markdale. For it, and your generous gift, accept my most sincere thanks, and believe, me gentlemen, to remain, ever yours truly,

A. W. EATON.

OSPREY.

From a Correspondent.

Osprey seems pretty quiet just now, not even a wedding for people to gossip about, but we are looking for better times as the winter has evidently arrived.

People in this section seem unanimous in wishing for more snow. Fall plowing is much further advanced this season than any previous year.

On Thursday last the infant son of Mr. W. Hopper, 9th con. Artemesia, got his arm badly injured while playing, but under proper treatment is likely to recover.

The semi-annual meeting of the Presbyterian Congregation, Feversham was held in the church on the 10th inst., when general business was transacted, and the congregation found to be in a good financial condition.

Ordination of Elders took place in the McIntyre church on the 19th, there was a good attendance.

We had the pleasure of seeing a copy of the Flesherton Advance last week. Pity to see people so jealous, envying those two gentlemen at the Station the pleasure of each other's company, and the music they enjoy in leisure hours. Pity on the small boys if they stand with open mouth this weather. Diphtheria or some unpleasant consequences will be the result.

LYNCH LAW IN OHIO.

When mulatto Davis was lynched at Athens, Ohio, on the 22nd inst., for outraging an old white lady, he was taken to a bridge with a rope around his neck. He was asked to confess. He inquired what would be done with him if he confessed. The mob told him that he would be taken back to the goal to be delt with by the law. He hesitated, and again asked if they would not hang him if he confessed. Being assured that they would not, he said, "I'm the man." At this there was an instant cry of "throw him off." The other end of the rope was made fast to the bridge, and they gave him three minutes in which to pray, but he did not attempt to pray. He said he was ready to die when the time expired. He was hurled off the bridge, and his neck was broken by the fall.

TYRONE ITEMS.

From our Correspondent.

We have just got our season's crop into the granary, and the yield is very satisfactory, being better than we have had for some years past.

Game is plentiful, and hares, rabbits, and partridges furnish abundant employment for the sportsman; and if you could pay us a visit, we promise you a good day's sport and a hearty welcome; and if you desire larger game than the above, deer are to be found in large numbers, and bears are more plentiful than we could wish.

Mr. John Sauders, of your locality, has been in this good neighborhood of Tyrone during the past seven weeks, and has given the entire community the most successful "threshing" ever inflicted upon an unoffending people. We intend to get him to repeat the dose this time next year, for the people all are highly pleased with his style of doing it—it was our grain he threshed.

There is a very general feeling that a change should be made in the personnel of some of the members of our Township Council. Webster stands well with the ratepayers, as an independent pains-taking man, and as Ward No. 1 immediately adjoins us, we have a good opportunity of ascertaining the opinion of his constituents, there is not much likelihood of opposition to his re election. There are, no doubt, other good men in the Council, but we are unacquainted with their management of the affairs of the respective Wards they represent.

In your next issue give us the latest weather predictions for the coming winter,

And oblige

MANY TYRONIANS.

MELANCHTON COUNCIL.

The council met at the Town Hall on Monday, 7th Nov., pursuant to adjournment. Members present—Jas. Huxtable, Esq., Reeve, Chas. McDowell, Esq., Deputy Reeve, Messrs. Bailey, Hogg, and Corbett, Councillors. The Reeve in the chair. Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed. A communication from Mr. August was presented and read. A petition from David Martin was presented and read.

Mr. McDowell moved, seconded by Mr. Corbett, that in regard to the petition of David Martin and others praying for the establishment of a new polling sub-division at River View, the council consider that the change would be judicious, but it is too late this year as the Voters Lists are made out and cannot be changed.

Mr. McDowell moved seconded by Mr. Bailey, that in regard to the road job of Wm. Gant, let by Mr. August, in 1877, this council is willing to pay for said job if the work is done, but have no statement or specifications of said work.—Carried.

Neathercut be accepted as sureties on behalf of Samuel McDowell, collector of rates for the year 1881.—Carried.

Mr. McDowell moved, seconded by Mr. Corbett, that Mr. Oldfield's bill for moving crossway and clearing out the 250 sideroad, amounting to $16, be paid, and the Reeve issue his order for the same.—Carried.

Oldfield, $22; S. Broughton, $12; J. Rimdell, $12; J. Bowler, $3; John Hogg, Commissioner, 10 days at $1.25, $12.—Carried.

Mr. McDowell moved, seconded by Mr. Corbett, that whereas Wm. White is desirous of procuring a tavern license on lot 8, on the 9th Con. S. W., it is resolved that a reduction of $20 be made by this council on said license, in consequence of half the license year having expired.

Mr. Corbett moved, seconded by Mr. Hogg, that in regard to the drain affecting George Scott, we would recommend that he get it run, and if same is not parallel with drain, and contractor's certificate to his willingness to the shifting of same by our Engineer, (Scott paying any additional expenses necessary thereby), that the Engineer proceed at once to re-locate the drain to suit parties interested.—Carried.

Mr. McDowell moved, seconded by Mr. Hogg, that whereas the townline between the townships of Mulmur and Melancthon north of the sideroad is impassable, and the township of Mulmur has granted the sum of $50 to open said road on condition that the council of Melancthon grant a like amount, it is resolved that this council supplement the said grant, and Mr. Baily be appointed to let and inspect the same.—Carried.

Mr. McDowell moved, seconded by Mr. Mr. Corbett, that By-law No. 79 to ratify the settlement between the County of Grey and the township of Melancthon be read a third time, be signed, sealed, and engrossed on the By-law book.—Carried.

Mr. Bailey moved, seconded by Mr. Hogg, that the Clerk be paid $4, and the Reeve and Assessor, $3 each, for selecting jurors for the year 1882, and that the Reeve issue an order in accordance therewith.—Carried.

Mr. McDowell moved, seconded by Mr. Corbett, that By-law No. 81 to establish deviation of road on lot 25, 7th concession S. W., be read a first and and second time.—Carried.

Mr. Corbett moved, seconded by Mr. Hogg, that By law 81 for the establishment of deviation of road now read a first and second time, be now read a third time, and signed, sealed, and engrossed in the By-law book.—Carried.

Mr. Bailey moved, seconded by Mr. Hogg, that this council do now adjourn to meet again on Monday, the 21st inst.

JAMES BROWN, Clerk.

The first volume of the census returns is almost completed, and will shortly be put in the hands of the printer, and will probably be ready for distribution when Parliament meets. It will embrace all facts and figures relating to the census proper, that is to say, the population, nationalities, origin, ages, condition, etc., of the people from one end of the Dominion to the other. The work is being carried on under Dr. Tache, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, with the utmost care and attention to details, and will no doubt prove a valuable and interesting addition to our official literature.

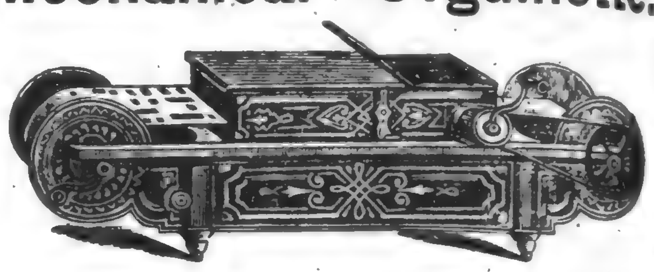
Mechanical Orguinette.



An Automatic Reed Organ

"The Orguinette may now be called a celebrated instrument. In tone it is like to the Cabinet Organ, but the organ must be manipulated by an artist in order to produce music; the ORGUINETTE is on the other hand entirely mechanical in its action, and at a trifling expense it can be made to furnish an unlimited supply of all kinds of music.—Toronto Globe."

"The Orguinette is indeed a musical wonder. It is a miniature reed organ, with as strong and melodious a tone as the Cabinet Size. It surpasses the Cabinet Organ for the reason that the ignoramus in music can play it as well as the most accomplished professor. THE ORGUINETTE is strong and accurate in its mechanism, and consequently not liable to get out of order."—Montreal Gazette.

"The Orguinette is the most perfect automatic musical instrument yet invented; its repertorie is unlimited, the tone is remarkably good."—Montreal Star.

Just received a lot of beautiful English Colored Gold Setts, very low, at W. F. Doll's, Flesherton.

Mr. Dan. McFarland, as will be seen by reference to our advertising columns, has leased Richardson's Blacksmith's shop, where he intends to carry on a general jobbing business. Horse shoeing a specialty. Give him a call.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Habitual Constipation, Biliousness, Liver or Kidney Affections, the safest and best remedy is Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, the great family medicine. They can with perfect safety be given to the youngest child as they are purely vegetable in composition and mild in their action. Sold in large panel bottles at 50 cents A. TURNER & Co. special agents for Markdale.

Moffat Brothers announce in this issue of the STANDARD that they have their Foundry and Machine shop in working order, and are now prepared to furnish anything in their line with promptness and at fair living rates. Read their advertisement and then give them a call, and we feel assured they will give you full satisfaction.

Going to do some trading are you? Well, take my advice and go direct to McFarland's, he is the only merchant in Markdale that imports his goods direct, and consequently can sell cheaper than the rest. His 18 cent Brown, Blue, Myrtle, and Bronze Lustres are very cheap, his winceys are cheap, his Cashmeres are cheap, his Flannels, Shawls, and Mantles are cheap. In fact I can save $1 in every $10 worth I purchase by buying from McFarland.

A REAL NECESSITY.

No house should be without a bottle of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, in case of accident. There is no preparation offered to suffering humanity that has made so many permanent cures, or relieved so much pain and misery. It is called by some the Good Samaritan, by others the Cure-all, and by the afflicted an Angel of Mercy.

Hill Bros. are advertising, by way of hand bills, for tenders for the supply of 20,000 cedar railway ties, and 2,000 cords of cedar posts, for which they will pay cash.

We will give the STANDARD or HERALD, with any of the following publications for $2, or either of them can be obtained singly at $1. Weekly Mail, Weekly Globe Farmers Advocate and Canada Farmer. The American Agriculturist in connection with the STANDARD or HERALD $1. Singly, $1.50.

A. O. U. W.—A Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen was organized here on Monday evening last, with a considerable membership, when the following officers were elected:—A. B. Lang, P. M. W.; J. Rutherford, M. W.; D. Morrison, F; W. J. Paterson, O.; G. Gorbet jr., R.; H. Darie, F.; J. McLauchlan, R.; C. Hall, jr., G.; J. W. Redfern, I. W.; C. C. Pearce, O. W:—O. S. Times.

IF YOU DON'T BELIEVE IT, ASK ANY GERMAN.

And he will convince you that St. Jacobs Oil is the most wonderful remedy that has ever been brought before the public. Rheumatism of many years standing has yielded immediately to its almost magical influence. As many have expressed it, its action is electrical, seeming to drive the pain before it until all discomfort leaves the body and the warm glow of health and comfort remains. It is a certain cure for neuralgia, giving immediate relief upon the first application, and curing, in a short time, the most inveterate cases.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage etc., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts., or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!

LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.

A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

GOOD NATURE.

Of all the virtues and graces, there is none, perhaps, that wears better, is more comforting and comfortable to live along side of, to have in the house with one, than good nature.

Beauty is pleasant to look upon, but fades in a few brief years; and sometimes, even in its full flush and glow, loses its attractiveness, becomes distasteful, if we but discover it to be but a mask covering unlovely traits of character. Energy and thrift and faculty are commendable qualities, and if not combined with a too shrewish or domineering disposition, render their possessor a useful member of society, and a desirable companion on the journey of life. Talent and genius we admire; and cultivated manners are pleasant to meet with; but good-nature, that cheerful and sunny disposition that takes the world at its best—that gives smiles for frowns, and gentle words for harsh and bitter ones—that overlooks wrongs and forgets injuries—who shall give it its full meed of praise?

I have in my minds eye as I write, a little woman who possesses this virtue in an eminent degree—not that idle good-nature that is good-natured because it is too sluggish and easy to take the world in any other fashion; but that good-nature that is made up from a naturally kind disposition, combined with a temper disciplined and under control, a judgment enlarged and a heart rendered charitable to the school of life; and a mind that has learned through observation and experience how far better it is to pass lightly over the ills and misfortunes and even the wrongs that we bear, than to dwell upon, enlarge and make much of them.

Such a person is Mrs.———. Nor is she one of those who, being good themselves, feel themselves called upon to thrust other peoples failings and short-comings in their faces. And yet quite unassuming as her goodness is, one cannot but be better in her presence; as the example is so lovely and bears such excellent fruit, to pattern after it comes as a natural and spontaneous desire.

People go into her house and come away saying, 'What an amiable lady.' 'What sweet and pleasant ways she has!'—though they generally add (it is so hard to give absolute and unstinted praise even when it is due) 'but then it is easy enough for her to be good; such pleasant surroundings; such lovely and good tempered children; such a devoted husband!'

Yes, the children are indeed pleasant mannered and amiable. They never see mamma in the sulks, nor with an ugly frown upon her face, or scolding the cook or quarrelling with papa. And what wonder—since they think mamma perfection itself—they should follow in her footsteps and take upon themselves her pretty, gentle ways? Place them under a different guardianship for a few years, and see how they will come out, and whether or no they possess more than ordinary goodness or sweetness of disposition.

Her husband indeed is devoted, and knows that he has a precious jewel in his wife; yet he is far from being perfection, after all; and like many another masculine, when he has an attack of dyspepsia, or business cares weigh upon him is a little irritable and unreasonable; or if plain words are to be used, a trifle, and sometimes more than a trifle cross.

"In the first years of our married life," said Mrs. M. to me one day. "Henry used to be much more fretful and unreasonable than he is now; and I was young, sensative and inexperienced, and would cry my eyes nearly out over every cross word he said to me; I found this didn't mend matters; and when the children began to come I said to myself, what a miserable household I shall have, and how unfitted I shall be to train up my little ones into happy and cheerful men and women that I desire them to be, if I keep on like this. And I made a resolution that I would wear a smile and take things in a cheerful way, let come what would; that let Henry say what he liked to me, I would not mind in the least; that I would take every cross or fault-finding word as if it were not meant—would turn it off as a jest, or at least let it pass lightly as not worth worrying over; and I have held to my resolution ever since. My husband at first scarcely knew what to make of it; but he soon found I was not to be fretted, saddened or put out; and as there was neither opposition to his irritableness nor fuel furnished it, it burned out the sooner; and I think he grew ashamed of his one-sided disagreeableness, for he seldom speaks now in any but an amiable way; and I flatter myself we are about as cheerful and happy a family, take us all in all, as is to be found."

How much better this, than to make much of every hurt and wrong; to brood over and dwell upon it until a mote becomes a mountain.

Try my little friend's practice, weary wife and mother, to whom life seems all up-hill work, with little recompense or gratitude, and see if her plan of "not minding," taking things in a light and cheeful way, does not pour oil upon the troubled waters, and make the sometimes rough and hard-going wheels of domestic machinery run in more easy and comfortable groves.

A WORLD OF GOOD.—One of the most popular medicines now before the American public, is Hop Bitters. You see it every where. People take it with good effect. It builds them up. It is not as pleasant to the taste as some other Bitters as it is not a whiskey drink. It is more like the old fashioned bone set tea that has done a world of good. If you don't feel just right try Hop Bitters.—Nunda News.

CORRECT SPEAKING.

We would advise all young people to acquire in early life, the habit of correct speaking and writing; and to abandon, as far as possible, any use of slang words and frases. The longer you live the more difficult correct language will be; and if the golden age of youth, the proper season for the acquisition of language, be passed in its abuse, the unfortunate victim, if neglected, is very properly doomed to talk slang for life. Money is not necessary to procure this education. Every man has it in his power. He has merely to use the language which he reads, instead of the slang which he hears; to form his taste from the best speakers and poets in the country; to treasure up the choice phrases in his memory, and habituate himself to their use, avoiding at the same time that pedantic decision and bombast which show the weakness of vain ambition rather than the polish of an educated man.

AFTER A PASS.

A few days ago we fell into the company of an old officer of the army of Tennessee, who related the following incident characteristic of army dodges:

Upon one occasion, when General Rosencrans had "shut down" upon passes for officers' and soldiers' wives, a member of the former class telegraphed from Louisville to General, now President Garfield, chief of staff, that her husband, an artillery officer, was very sick, perhaps dying, and that she must see him; and requested the general to authorize the issuing to her of a pass to Murfreesborough. The general had a weak side for such appeals, and his heart was touched; but knowing nothing of the matter he turned it over to Colonel Barnett, chief of artillery. The colonel also sympathized with the distressed wife, and sent an orderly out to the husband's battery to inquire into his condition, that the devoted wife might be advised thereof. It was only a few hours before the husband came into head quarters with astonishment depicted in his face. Something's the matter, some how or somewhere, he dosen't know exactly what.

"How do you do?" asked the artillery chief blandly.

"First rate, sir.'

"Where have you been of late!'

"At my battery; on duty.'

"Have you not been sick lately?'

"No, indeed! Never had better health in my life.'

"Quite sure of it, are you?'

"Of course I am. I think I ought to know.'

"You have been on duty all the time? Haven't you been absent from your command at all?'

"Not a day.'

"Perfectly well now; no consumption, liver complaint, fever, spleen, or Tennessee quick stop, eh?'

"Certainly not. Why do you ask?'

In reply to this natural query the telegram of his anxious wife was handed to him. He read it, looked down and pondered for a moment in silent wonder at the ingenuity of women, then called for a bottle of wine and a general "smile" circulated among the bystanders as he remarked half regretfully:

"Hang it all, I wish Mollie wouldn't get up dodges of that kind without letting a fellow know. I could just as easy have been at the point of death as not."

The loving wife was informed by telegraph that her husband was in no danger, infact was doing remarkably well. Thus she was circumvented for a time. Yet, to "vindicate the truth of history,' we must add that she eventually gained her point in some other way—what Yankee wife will not?—and made her visit successfully.

WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE, WHO SHALL DECIDE?

Nothing is more variable than the different opinions of medical men; but when they fail to agree, or to perform a cure in a chronic disease, the patients often decide for themselves, and take Burdock Blood Bitters, and speedily recover. It is the grand key to health that unlocks all the secretions, and liberates the slave from the captivity of disease.

MAKING TEETH.

The manufacture of teeth is a large industry. There are now twelve manufactories of artificial teeth, which produce every year 10,000,000 teeth, or one to every five persons in the United States. Half this number is made by one firm, founded in 1844.—The total sales of teeth amount to $1,000,000 annually. The material used are feldspar, kaolin and rock crystal. The coloring is platinum, titanium and gold. The feldspar and crystal are submitted to red heat and thrown into cold water. They are then ground in water until fine enough to float. Combined with the coloring they are subjected to intense furnace heat in moulds of brass, which are in two pieces, each moulding one half of the tooth.

The process is delicate, and has many interesting details. In the earlier history of the art dentists carved the teeth which their customers demanded, and apprentices were often made useful in this way. The amount of gold used annually in filling teeth is $500,000. Lead was used from 1778 to 1833. There are dentists in New York who give, or say they give, diamond fillings, and in Paris they advertise to use diamond pivots and emerald plugs. The filling of teeth is aided greatly by labor-saving machinery and cunningly wrought tools. This country makes dental instruments for the world where dentistry is known. An ordinary outfit of instruments costs $300.—Providence Journal.

"WHAT EVERY ONE SAYS MUST BE TRUE."

And every one who has tested its merits speaks warmly in praise of Hagyards Pectoral Balsam as a positive cure for all throat and lung complaints, coughs and colds, sore throat, bronchitis, and incipient consumption.

TALK AT HOME.

Endeavor always to talk your best before your children. They hunger for new ideas. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they will deem a drugery to study from books; and even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of many educational advantages, they will grow up intelligent if the enjoy in childhood the privilege of listening daily to the conversation of intelligent people. We sometimes see parents, who are the life of every company they enter, dull, silent and uninteresting at home among their children. If they have not mental activity and mental stores sufficient for both, let them first use what they have for their own households. A silent home is a dull place for young people, a place from which they will escape if they can. How much useful information on the other hand, is often given in pleasant conversation, and what unconscious but mental training in lively social argument. Cultivate to the uttermost the grace of conversation.

WEAK LUNGS AND HOW TO MAKE THEM STRONG.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

'Never mind your style—you admire nothing but plain young women with sallow skins and irregular features—that is understood. Mr. Dantree, do you correspond with this young lady?'

'Certainly not. Katherine, what do you mean?'

The carless look had left his face, the parlor had deepened. Who had been talking to her—what had she found out? Good Heavens! to have eight thousand a yearquivering in the balance like this.

'What I mean is this, Mr. Dantree, this is your writing I believe, and I infer you are returning Miss De Lansac's letters and picture. This packet fell out of your coat pocket inthe cloak room. You never corresponded with Miss De Lansac—you only gave her singing lessons? That will do, Mr. Dantree—don't tell me more falsehoods than you can help.'

She placed the packet in his hand. He had never thought of that. His face changed as she looked at him for a moment. In spite of the admirable training of his life he stood before her dumb—condemned out of his own mouth.

The steady, strong gray eyes never left his face—her own was quite colourless now.

'Not one word' she said, in a sort of whisper; 'and look at him. It is true, then—all they have said. He is false—false!'

'I am not false,' Mr. Dantree retorted, angrily. 'Don't be so ready to condemn unheard. If you will do me the honour to listen, I can explain.'

She Laughed contemptuously.

'Not a doubt of it, Mr. Dantree. You could explain black was white if one listened to you long enough. I'm afraid I have listened to you too long already. How many of the million lies you are in the habit of telling hav you told me?'

'Not one— not the shadow of one. For shame, Katherine, to taunt me with idle words spoken in jest. I have told you the truth concerning so Miss De Lansac—the simple truth. faras I am concerned. I gave hermusic lessons—I never cared for her—no, Katherine, not one jot—but she—that is—she—oh, it is quite impossible to explain.'

'She fell in love with you! is that what your modesty will not permit you to say, Mr. Dantree? She fell in love—this poor Miss De Lansac—with her handsome singing master, whether he would or no?'

'Yes, then! Gaston Dantree said, folding his arms and looking at her with sulky defiance,since you makeme say it. Think me a coxcomb,a puppy if you will, she did fall in love withme and she did write to me since I left New Orleans. I never answered those letters. I told you the truth when I said I did not correspond with her. Last night I came across them by chance, and as your plighted husband I felt I had no right to keep them longer. I made them up as you see, to return to her, feeling sure that after that, she would never address me again. I never told you of her—why should I? She was simply nothing to me, and to tell you that a young lady of New Orleans took a fancy to me, and wrote me letters, would not be very creditable to me.'

She drew a long breath.

'And that is all?' she said, slowly.

'All. Miss Dangerfield— on my sacred honour!'

If I could only think so! If I only dare believe you!'

'You are complimentary, Katherine When you doubt my word like this, it is high time for us to part.'

He knewher well—how to stab most surely.

'Part!' her sensitive lips quivered. 'How lightly he talks of parting, Gaston! you see—I love you wholly—I trust you entirely. You are so dear to me, that the bare thought of any other having a claim on you, be it ever so light, is unendurable. Will you swear to me that this is true?'

He lifted his arm—to give the oath proper stage effect.

'By all I hold sacred, I swear it Katherine!'

It was a very binding oath—there was nothing on earth below, or the sky above, that Mr. Gaston Dantree held sacred. But it is easy to believe what we most want to believe. As the old Latin has it. The quarreling of lovers is the renewing of love. Mr. Dantree and Miss Dangerfield kept devotedly together for the rest of the night, and peace smiled again; but the cloud no bigger than a man's hand had risen that was speedily to darken all the sky. Katherine's perfect trust was gone—gone for ever. Had he told her the truth, or was it all a tissue of falsehoods? Had another woman a claim on him, and was it her fortune he loved, as everybody said—not herself?

'And poverty above?' thought Mr. Dantree; 'what am I to do with a jealous, exacting wife? what a savage look there was in her eye for one moment; the Dangerfields were ever a bitter, bad race. A game were two women claim one man must be a losing game for the man in the end. I begin to see that.'

At five in the morning the ball at Langton Royals broke up. Miss Dangerfield was driving homethrough the cold blackness that precedes the dawn, shivering in her furry wraps. She toiled slowly and wearily upstair. She had danced a great deal and was tired to death. She had been in wild spirits the first half of the night, now the reaction had come, and she looked haggard and hollow-eyed, she ascended to her room.

It as all was bright in that sanctuary of maidenhood. A genial fire blazed on the hearth, her little white bed, with its lace and silken draperies and plump white pillows looked temptingly cosy. A softly-cushioned sleepily hollow of an easy chair was drawn up before the fire. Katherine flung herself into it with a tired sigh.

'It is good to be home,' she said. 'Take off these tiresome things,Ninon —quick—and go.'

The deft fingured Frenchgirl obeyed. The floating, brown hair was brushed and bound for the pillow, the lace and tulle, the silk and diamond sprays were removed, and her night robe donned, and Katherine thrust her feet into slippers, and drew her chair close to the fire.

'Anything more, mademoiselle?'

'Nothing, Ninon; you may go?'

The maid went, and the heiress was alone. She felt tired and sleepy and out of sorts, but still she did not go to bed. She lay back in her chair and listening to the black morning wind howling through the trees of the park, with closed eyes.

'Marie De Lansac? Marie De Lansac!' She seemed to hear that name in the wailing of the wind, in the ticking of the little Swiss clock, in the light fall of the cinders, and with it ringing in her ears, she dropped asleep.

And, sleeping, she dreamed. She was floating somewhere down a warm golden river, overhead a sunlight, a rosy sky, all the air quivered with music. And as she floated on and on in a delicious trance, she saw the golden sky blacken, she heard the winds rise, and the river darken and heave. The music changed to the wild song of the siren, luring her on to the black depths below. Down, down she felt herself sinking, the cold waters closing over her head. She looked up in death agony, and saw her lover standing safe on the shore and smiling at her throes. She stretched out her arms to him.

'Help, Gaston, help!' she strove to cry, but the rising waters drowned her voice, and the shrill wind bore them away. The siren song grew louder. She could hear the words, 'False as fair! false as fair!' And still the waters rose. The white arms wreathed around her lover—standing smiling there—a beautiful, deriding face mocked her over his shoulder.

'I am Marie De Lansac,' said the taunting voice, 'and he is mine.'

Then the bitter water of death closed over her head, and with a grasping cry she started up awake—the fatal words yet ringing in her ears, 'False as fair! false as fair!'

The chill, gray light of the October dawn filled the room, and the fire died black out on the hearth, and she was cramped and cold. Even in her dreams that warning came to her. She drew out her watch and looked at the hour. Only seven, but Catherine Dangerfield slept no more.

CHAPTER X.

BEFORE THE WEDDING.

'Married on New Year's Eve! Married on New Year's Eve! Do I hear you aright? Is it possible you mean this?'

Sir John Dangerfield, seated in dressing-gown and slippers before the study fire, laid down the Times, and blankly asked this question. His daughter stood behind his chair, keeping her face steadily averted.

'Let me look at you, child—come here. Let me see if this is my little Kathie who sang her doll to sleep yesterday, and who comes to me now and asks to be married on New Year's Day. Ah, you cannot—you do not mean it, after all."

'Papa, I do,' Katherine cried, desperately, feeling again what a cruel thing it had been of Gaston to subject her to this ordeal: 'at least I don't but he—that is—oh, papa, I have explained already.'

'You have repeated Mr. Gaston Dantree's plausible pretexts, of which I don't believe one word. He dared not face me again; he ordered you to come to me and obtain my consent to your marriage on New Year's Eve.—Coward! craven coward!'

'Papa don't. You misjudge him—he is no coward—even you have no right to call him so. Oh, papa, how can you be so unkind to him, to me. You were so harsh, so harsh to him when he spoke to you before, and you knew he could not, would not, retort in kind. You wouldn't like it yourself—to sit still and be abused. You must not call Gaston such hard names. Even from you I cannot bear it.'

But in the depth of her heart, even while she fought desperately for her absent lover, she felt it to be true. He was a coward.

'Here her the baronet said with suppressed intensity, 'hear her take his part against me—this man whom she has not known two months. Well, well, it is the reward the old always receive from the young.'

Two white arms clasped his neck, two impetuous lips stooped down and kissed him.

'Papa, darling is it generous of you to do this? You know I love you dearly, dearly! but, papa, I love him too. I can't help it; I don't know why; I [illegible] I do with all my heart.'

He looked at her tenderly—the hard bitterness of his mouth relaxing into a smile, half sad, half cynical.

'My little one,' he said, 'my little one, you don't know why. Shall I tell you? A little for his dark eyes, a little for his silken hair, a little for his seductive voice and sugary words, and a great deal, oh, my romantic Kathie, —for your own poetical imagination. If you saw Gaston Dantree below the surface for an hour you would scorn him your life long. But you take this good-looking Louisianian at his own valuation, and invest him with a halo of nobility all your own, and set him up and worship him. My daughter, take care, take care. Your god will crumble to clay before your eyes, and what is left then; believe me, little Kathie, there is more needed to make a wife happy than long lashes and a musical voice.

Kathie looked up and met her father's eyes full for the first time, her lips compressed into a resolute line.—An hour ago she had seemed to him a wayward little girl—he knew now, for the first time, he had a woman to deal with—a woman in love, and resolute to have her way.

'You treat me as though I was ten years old and asking a plaything. Papa, I love Gaston, he wants me to be his wife, and I have promised, A promise given should be a promise kept. I will marry him, or go to my grave unmarried.'

'Then, heaven help you! My years on earth will not be many—don't interrumpt me, Katherine; I know what I am saying—and when I am gone, and you are left to that man's mercy, I say again, Heaven help you!'

'He has given you no earthly reason to say it!' Katherine exclaimed, 'and it is not like you to be unjust. It is a shame, papa! a shame! You know nothing wrong of him—nothing. Even the grim, pittiless English law takes the prisoner in the dock to be innocent until he is proven guilty.—You speak of him as though he was a villian, doubly-dyed! I repeat, it is a shame, to slander the absent in this way and a soldier who has fought for his country, as you have, ought to be the last to do it. You wrote to New Orleans to find out his character—did the answer justify such dark suspicions as these?

'The answer left me as much in the dark as eve. Mr. Dantree's character in New Orleans is simply nil—no one knew anything much either to his credit or discredit, You defend your lover staunchly, Katherine. I don't think the worse of you for it,but it wont do. Even you, my child, eloquent as you are, with all your special pleading, cannot make a hero of Gaston Dantree.'

'I don't want to make a hero of him: he suits me well enough as he is, with all his faults, whatever they may be, I am willing to take him—to hold to him all my life; and be very sure, whatever that life may prove, no one alive shall ever hear me complain of him.'

'I believe you,' her father said, quietly. 'you are not a model young lady by any means, but you deserve a much better husband than Gaston Dantree. Child! Child! are you hopelessly infatuated—I might as well talk to the trees waving yonder outside the window as to a romantic girl in love. But think a moment—think how little you know of this man. Who is to prove that he hasn't a wife already out yonder in the Southern States,

'Papa!' But there was a sharp, sudden pang in her voice as she uttered the indignant cry. Marie De Lansac; The name that haunted her dreams that morning, came back.

Ah! Katherine, flying into a passion will not prove his worth. I repeat we know nothing of him—nothing but what he has chosen to tell or invent. Do you really believe, my poor Donna Quixote, that if some freak of fortune deprived you to morrow of Scarswood and its rent-roll, he would prove faithful to the love he has vowed? If you were penniless—as he is—do you believe he would ever make you his wife?'

She met his sad gaze, full; but she was white to the lips.

'I believe it, papa. I know how I would act by him; poverty—disgrace even, would only make me cling the more devotedly to him. I would take his part against all the world, and why should I think him less generous? Papa, it may be your duty, but you torture me. What is the use of saying such things except to make me miserable.'

It was not her father's words that made her miserable—it was the doubt in her own heart, the conviction that he spoke the truth. Not all her insane infatuation could convince her that this man was either loyal and true. She had been brought up in a peculiar way enough, this impulsive Katherine, and if there is any excuse to be make for her wilful peversity, it lies in that. Motherless at the age of three, left to a doting father, spoiled by Indian nurses, indulged in every caprice, she had grown up headstrong and full of faults. The Indian colonel had taught her to scorn a lie as the base crime of a coward; and taught her to be true as steel, loyal, generous and brave; and she new in her inmost heart that Gaston Dantree was none of these things—was twice as unstable as water. Only her girl's fancy had gone out to him, and it was too late to recall the gift.

Her father drew her to him and kissed her.

'I will say no more—not one word; and yet it is a cruel kindness. Do you know what I should have done, Kathie, when that fellow came here to ask your hand? I should have said: 'She is there; take her if you will. She is quite ready and capable of running away with you to-morrow; if you ask her; but as long as I live, not one farthing will she ever receive from me—not though she were starving. I will never forgive her; I will never see her. She is in love with you; take her, and when the honeymoon is over—starve.' I mean this, Mr. Dantree, and we Dangerfields know how to keep our word.' Kathie, he would never have set foot again within this house, and you—you would hate your father. I don't think I could bear that, and so, oh child! marry him if you will, on New Year's Eve—what does a month more or less matter?—and may the good God keep you, and defend you from the fate of a broken-hearted wife.'

She made no reply; her face was hidden on his shoulder.

'I fear for your future, my child!—I fear! I fear!' the old soldier said, with strange pathos. 'I foresee more than I dare tell. Kathie, Kathie! Do you'—his steady voice faltered a little—'do you think you could bear to be poor?'

'Poor, papa?' she lifted her head and looked at him in surprise.

'Yes, Katherine, to be poor; not as we were poor in India, with servants to wait upon us, and a colonel's pay to live on; but if I were to die, and it may be soon—child, be still—and you were left alone in the world, friendless and portionless, to earn your own living as other girls do; do you think you could bear that? to eat poor food? to wear poor clothing? to labor for others? that is the sort of poverty I mean,'

She gazed at him, lost in wonder.

'Poor, poor. I, a baronet's daughter, the heiress of Scarswood. Papa,' bursting into a laugh for the first time, what nonsense you are talking! It is impossible for me to be poor!'

'But suppose it were not,' he spoke with feverish eagerness, shifting away from the gaze of the bright wondering eyes; 'suppose it were possible; suppose such a fate overtook you; could you bear it?'

'Sir John Dangerfield,' the young lady responded, impatiently, 'I don't want to suppose it; I don't want to suppose such a preposterous thing.—No, I couldn't bear it, there. I would rather die than be poor; living on crusts; wearing shabby dresses; and working for insolent, purse-proud common rich people. Papa, I would just quietly glide out of life in a double dose of morphine, and make an end of it all. But what's the use of talking such rubbish? I am Katherine Dangefield, heiress; it is about as likely that I shall go up to the moon, like Hans Pfaal, and live there away from every body, as that I shall ever turn shop-girl and poor.'

He set his lips hard beneath his iron-grey moushtache, and his soldier's training stood him in good need now. Of the sharp pain at his heart his face showed no sign.

And you consent, papa; you dear, goodnatured old papa?' the girl said, her cheeks close to his lips, her lips close to his ear; 'you do consent! I am only seventeen, and silly, no doubt, but let me be happy in my own way. I deed; and I want to trust him; to believe in him. You'll let me, won't you? You won't say bitter cynical things any more. And you known you won't lose me, as you would if I married any one else. You'll only gain a son instead, and we will all live together here, as the fairy tales say, happy for ever after.'

He sighed resignedly, disengaged himself, and arose.

'"When a woman will, she will,' etc. Have your own way, Katherine. Let the wedding be on New Year's Eve. I give you carte blanche for the trousseau; order what you please. I can say no more than that. I will make the best of a bad bargain, since it is inevitable; I can't like him; I never can. Marry him if you will,but I would almost sooner see you dead than give your fate into his hands.—Keep him away from me; I would rather not meet him. And Katherine,' a pause.

'Well, papa,' she spoke rather sadly. It seemed rather hard that the two beings on earth whom she loved best could like one another no better than this. Her father was standing with his back to her, looking out of the window at the beeches tossing their stripped brances in the high autumnal gale.

'Yes, papa; what is it?'

'Don't offend Mrs. Vavasor.' He spoke with an effort. 'You don't like her, and take no pains to hide it.—Katherine, it won't do.'

'Why not, papa?'

'I can't tell you why; only she is your guest; as such she should be treated with courtesy.'

'Well, I do try to be courteous; that is, I try to endure her; but, papa, she is simply unendurable; it stifles me to live in the same house with her. I don't know why, I suppose we are antagonistic, as Gaston says, but my flesh creeps when she comes near me, just as it does when I meet a toad. She is like a serpent, papa; one of those deadly corbras we used to have out in India; with her glittering eyes, and her sharp, hissing voice, and her noiseless, gliding walk. Why can't you give her all the money she wants and pack her off about her business?'

'Because; well, because the world is civilized, and she is our guest. Let us respect the sanctity of the bread and salt. She has a hold upon me; I may admit that much, and it places me in her power. If I or you offend her, Katherine, it is in her power to injure us both more than I can say. It is impossible to explain; I can only say for the present, treat her civily for my sake.'

'I will try. For your sake, papa, I would do anything.'

'Except give up Gaston Dantrée! Well, well! it is the way of the world; the way of women; a very old way, too. And now go; I think I will settle my mind by reading the Times after all this. Arrange everything; but the wedding dress, let the wedding guests be bidden, and when the hour comes, I will be ready to give my daughter away to a man of whom I know nothing. That will do, Kathie; I would rather have no thanks. Let the subject of Mr. Dantree be dropped between us. It is a subject on which you and I can never agree, though we talk to the crack of doom.'

Katherine laid her hand on the handle of the door. There was a swift swish of silk outside; that little wretch Mrs. Vavasor, had been listening. But the passage was now deserted, and a tall, Indian cabinet hid the crouching figure completely.

Miss Dangerfield rode out under the open sky and sunny downs with her affianced, and Mr. Dantree simply heard that papa had consented that the marriage should take place upon New Year's Eve, no more. But he could easily infer the rest from Katherine's clouded face.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

FEMALE LADIES.—Those languid, tiresome sensations, causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its elasticity; driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering your irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstructions of your system are relieved at once, while the special cause of periodical pain is permanently removed. Will you heed this?—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

THE EARTH DRYING UP.

Referring to the recent statements in our columns on the subject of the gradual fall, in recent years, of the great inland lakes—more particularly in Ontario—the New York Times says:

There is abundant evidence that the amount of water on the surface of the earth has been steadily diminishing for many thousands of years. No one doubts that there was a time when the Caspian Sea communicated with the Black Sea, and when the Mediterranean covered the greater part of the Desert of Sahara. In fact, geologists tell us that at one period the whole of the earth was covered by water, and the fact that continents of dry land now exist is proof that there is less water on our globe now than there was in its infancy. This diminution of our supply of water is going on at the present day at a rate so rapid as to be clearly appreciable. The rivers and streams of our Atlantic States are visibly smaller than they were twenty-five years ago. Country brooks in which men now living were accustomed to fish and bathe in their boyhood have in many cases totally disappeared, not through act of man, but solely in consequence of the failure of the springs and rains which once fed them. The level of the great lakes is falling year by year. There are many piers on the shores of lake-side cities which vessels once approached with ease, but which now hardly reach the edge of the water. Harbors are everywhere growing shallower. This is not due to the gradual deposit of earth brought down by rivers, of refuse from city sewers. The harbor of Toronto has grown shallower in spite of the fact that it has been dredged out so that the bottom rock has been reached, and all the dredging that can be done to the harbor of New York will not permanently deepen it. The growing shallowness of the Hudson is more evident above Albany than it is in the tide water region, and, like the outlet of Lake Champlain, which was once navigable by Indian canoes at all seasons, the upper Hudson is now almost bare of water in many places during the summer. In all other parts of the world there is the same steady decrease of water in rivers and lakes, and the rainfall in Europe, where ... less than it was at a period within man's memory. What is becoming of our water? Obviously it is not disappearing through evaporation, for in that case rains would give back whatever water the atmosphere would absorb. We must accept the theory that, like the water of the moon, our water is sinking into the earth's interior.

HAGYARD'S YELLOW OIL.

Will be found invaluable for all purpose of a family medicine. Immediate relief will follow its use. It relieves pain, cures chilblains, frost bites, scalds, burns, corns, rheumatism, neuralgia, &c. For internal use it is none the less wonderful, One or two doses frequently cure sore throat. It will cure croup in a few minutes. A few bottles has often cured asthma. Colic has been cured by a teaspoonful dose. It cures with the utmost rapidity, it is really a wonderful medicine.

TREATMENT OF DIPHTHERIA.

Diphtheria being now somewhat prevalent a friend has sent us the published experience of Dr. Field, an English physician, in the treatment of this disease. It is there stated that:—

"All he took with him was powder of sulphur and a quill, and with these he cured every patient without exception. He put a teaspoonful of flour, of brimstone into a wineglass of water, and stirred it with his finger, instead of a spoon, as the sulphur does not readily amalgamate with water. When the sulphur was well mixed he gave it as a gargle, and in ten minutes the patient was out of danger. Brimstone kills every specie of fungus in man, beast and plant in a few minutes. Instead of spitting out the gargle, he recommended the swallowing of it. In extreme cases, in which he had been called just in the nick of time, when the fungus was too nearly closing to allow the gargling, he blew the sulphur through a quill into the throat, after the fungus had shrunk to allow of it, then the gargling. He never lost a patient from diphtheria. If a patient cannot gargle, take a live coal, put it on a shovel, and sprinkle a spoonful or two of flour of brimstone at a time upon it, and let the sufferer inhale it, holding the head over it, and the fungus will die. If plentifully used, the whole room may be filled almost to suffocation; the patient can walk about in it, inhaling the fumes, with doors and windows shut. The mode of fumigating a room with sulphur has often cured most violent attacks of cold in the head, chest, etc., at any time, and is recommended in cases of consumption and asthma."

A DEFINITION OF PRAYER.—"You must not pray as you would pull a bell, expecting some one to open the door and hand you what you ask for," said Mr. Beecher at his prayer meeting recently. "Prayer is the uplifting of the whole nature into the divine presence—the unfolding of the soul to sun itself in the light of God. It is the tone and disposition of our life, and no man can pray for six months or a year and then have any doubt left in his mind as to the efficacy of prayer. In fact, praying is the proof of prayer."

SURE CURE FOR A COUGH.

The most reliable remedy for a cough or cold, asthma, shortness of breath, sore throat, weak lungs, or bronchial troubles, is Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam. Price 25 cents.

NEWS NOTES.

... Young Men's conservative Association has been formed in Toronto.

It is expected Guitteau's trial will be ... about the 3rd inst., Saturday ...

Sir Leonard Tilley addressed an immense Temperance meeting at Napanee on the 25th ult.

It is estimated that Guitteau's trial will cost the United States Government about $150,000.

A project for the opening of another through line of railway from Montreal to Chicago is being talked of.

The Guitteau trial is still dragging its "weary length along." The impression is daily gaining ground that the prisoner is realy insane.

N. J. Clark, License Inspector for South Bruce, has been committed for trial on a charge of embezling $419 from John Donahoe, of Kinloss.

It is reported that the Ontario Government have appointed a Stipendary Magistrate for the Township of Biddulph, with headquarters at Lucan.

There seems to be little or no improvement in the state of affairs in Ireland. It appears that opposition to pay rent is rather on the increase, and the outrage and violence is as frequent as ever.

The nominations for the provincial legislature of the province of Quebec took place on Monday of last week, the 24th ult. Fifteen members were elected by acclamation, 10 Conseratives, 3 Reformers and 2 Independents.

Kingtson is getting notorious for brutal attacks on women. Hardly a week passes without witnessing one or more announcements of women being assaulted by the ruffianly blackguards with which the Lime Stone City appears to be infested.

The Scott Act is to be again submitted to the Ratepayers of the county of Lambton. E. King Dodds, for the Licensed Vitulers, and Prof. Foster, for the Temperance men, are mightly haranguing the "free and independent," and excitement runs high.

The City Council of Toronto passed a bread by law at its setting on Monday last, the 28th ult. It states that all bread sold in Toronto, of whatever shape or form, are to consist of one pound, pound and a half, two pounds three pounds, and four pounds respectively, and that the weight must be stamped on each loaf.

A serious fire occurred at Bridgeton, Ontario, on the 27th ult., which destroyed the Hungarian Flouring Mills of D. A. Campbell & Co., together with nine or ten thousand bushels of wheat, hundreds of barrels of flour, and an immense quantity of cord wood. The loss is estimated to be close on $40,000. Insurance about $18,000.

The farmers around Montreal, as well as some of the banking institutions of that city, have been pretty badly swindled by a firm of commission Merchants, named Bessey Bros. They obtained large advances fromthe banks on what they represented as creamery butter, but what was in reality butter of lowest grade, hardly worth 10c per pound. The banks hold bills of lading, and will realize a trifle but the farmers will lose everything. The Sinnalers are now safe in that paridise of all rogues, the United States.

The propeller Lake Erie, of the Lake and River Steamship Company of Hamilton, was lost on Thursday last in Lake Michigan by a collision with the propeller Northern Queen, owed in Collingwood, ann proceeding, like the Lake Erie, to that port from Chicago. One of the crew of the Lake Erie was scalded to death. The well known steamer, Norseman went ashore a little east of Oshawa at an early hour on Tuesday morning, and now lies on the spot with seven feet of water in her hold. In this case there is fortunately no loss of life to deplore.—Mail

T. G. & B. RAILWAY.

The change of the gauge is to take place on Saturday. Only one train will go over the road on that day which will leave Owen Sound at 4.30 a.m., and will be due at Markdalo at 6.15, Flesherton at 6.38, Dundalk 7.13, arriving in Toronto at 12.05 p.m. There will be no train going north that day. Trains will run on the old time on the first three days of next week, we expect to be able to give the new time-table in our next issue.

Dr. McGregor, organizer for the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in answer to a statement that the organization was a fraud, challenges any stock company man to meet him before a public gathering at Berlin, Ont. and offers to forfeit $100 if he does not convince the meeting of the falseness of the charge.

It is now nearly thirteen years since the birth of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and from its infancy in 1868 down to the present day, and at no time greater than now, its growth has been continuons and healthy. In its ranks may be found men of every nationality, and of every calling in life, from the successful merchant and the professional man to the humblest mechanic, who find in such an organization the social and fraternal advantages that will prove a great benefit to him, and also the opportunity to make provision for the future of those who are bound to him by the ties of kindred and affection.

THE REID BLOCK.

This fine block, which was erected this summer, is just drawing to completion; it is of solid brick with stone dressings. The ground or first flat is devided into two fine stores with a solid brick wall between them. The two upper stories are finished for dwellings. The second flat consists of kitchen and pantry, dining-room, parlor, and one bedroom. The third flat is divided into four large sleeping apartments; there is also a large hall on each flat; there are cellars the full size of the building. The entrance to the dwellings is from the rear of the building facing the Revere Hetel. The rooms are large and well lighted, and take it altogether will prove as comfortable abodes as one would wish to occupy. The mason work was contracted for by Mr. James Reid of Mount Forest, and the way it was done is a credit to him, and proves that he is no mean workman, there is no better piece of brick work in Markdale. The carpenter work was contracted for by Mr. W. D. McLeod, architect, which is a sufficient guarantee that it will be well done. The plastering is being done by Messrs. W. Fox and James Reid, of Markdale, and undoubtedly will be no disgrace to them as workmen. The painting is being performed by Messers Mintern & Vail, of Meaford. These gentlemen's reputation as painters requires no puffing at our hands. This block when completed will be an ornament to our town. The shops will soon be ready for occupation, and any one desiring to rent them should apply at once, as no doubt such desirable places of business will be eagerly sought after.

The death is announced of Mrs. Fauquier, the wife of the Bishop of Algoma, a lady well known and appreciated in the religious world.

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.

We are glad to learn that the promoters of the Bill for rendering lawful marriage with the sister of a deceased wife are still active and hopeful. The object which they have in view is a worthy one. The common sense of the people tells them that there is no valid reason, physiological or moral, why such unions should be made illegal, while the welfare of motherless children and the peace and good feeling of the related families are often greatly promoted by them. The fact that in consequence of these and other considerations and in the exercise of freedom and choice, which should be the privilege of every citizen, within the limits of propriety and morality, many such marriages have been contracted renders the question one of the greatest practical importance, involving as it does the legitimacy of the offspring. The zeal and perseverance of the promoters of the Bill cannot much longer fail of the success they so well deserve. The fact that it passed its second reading in the House of Commons last session by the majority of 140 to 19, and was rejected in the Senate by only 31 votes to 30, expresses clearly enough the views of the people's representatives. It is scarcely probable that the prejudices of every member of the majority in the Upper House will prove strong enough to hold out through another session against the force of overmastering argument and the strongly expressed will of the people. Hence the "Marriage Law Reform Association," which was instituted so long as 1851, for the express purpose of promoting the passing of the Act in question, will enter upon the coming campaign with every prospect of success. Mr. Girouard's Bill will be promptly re-introduced, and can scarcely fail to become the law of the land. That accomplished, both Mr. Girouard and the members of the Association will have earned the thanks of all good citizens, and the especial gratitude of those who find the legality of their magriages and the legitimacy of their children in jeopardy. The association is fortunate in having as its Hon. Committee a number of gentlemen so influential and so thoroughly representative as the following:—Hon. Sir Francis Hincks, K.C.M.G., C.B.; Rev. A. DeSolo, LL.D., Professor of Hebrew and Oriental Literture, McGill University, Montreal; Rev. Gavin Lang, St. Andrew's Church (Church of Scotland), Montreal; Alex. W. Ogilvie, Esq., Montreal; Rev. J. F. Stevenson, LL.D. Emmanuel Church (Congregational), Montreal; Hon. Secretary, Robert D. McGibbon, Barrister, Montreal.—Globe.

A NATIONAL BLESSING.

The nineteenth Century, above all other ages, has been noted for its many inventions. It has given us the steam power in its thousand-fold applications, the telegraph, the telephone, the electric light, and innumerable other discoveries, all blessings to humanity; each day brings us new surprises until we have become so accustomed to the exhibitions of the genius of our century that any new development is at once received as a matter of natural consequence, and most people will simply remark: "I told you so." As an instance of this fact we would call attention to that wonderful discovery, St. Jacob's Oil. A few years ago this great German Remedy had never been heard of before in this country; to-day you can hardly find a man, woman or child in the United States who has not used the remedy for some pain or ache, or at least has witnessed its use, and seen its wonderful effects on a fellow-being. St. Jacob's Oil has become a national remedy, for it is known in every city, town, village, and hamlet in the country. It is a cosmopolitan preparation, for it is praised by the Americans, Germans, Italians, Bohemians, Danes, Swedes, Portugese, Spaniards, French, —yes, even by the "Heathen Chinee." It may be termed the universal blessing, for it is endorsed by the rich and poor, the clergyman and the physician, the merchant and the laborer, in fact by all classes of the community. St. Jacob's Oil, by its almost marvelous properties, can be employed for a simple cut or sprain, or the worst case of inflammatory Rheumatism. Persons who have been confined to their bed for years with that terrible disease rheumatism, have been completely cured by the use of a single bottle. Such casea have been quoted by the leading journals of our country; for instance, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch says: Under the title of Old Probabilities, one of the most useful and valuable officers of the United States Government is most widely known. But quite as well known is Prof. J. H. Tice, the meteorologist of the Mississippi Valley, whose contributions to his favorite study have given an almost national reputation. On a recent tour through the Northwest, the Professor had a narrow escape from the serious consequences of a sudden and very dangerous illness, the particulars of which he thus relates. "The day after concluding my course of lectures at Burlington, Iowa, on the 21st of December last, I was seized with a sudden attack of neuralgia in the chest, almost preventing breathing. My pulse, usually eighty, fell to thirty-five; intense nausea of the stomach succeeded, and a cold clamy sweat covered my entire body. The attending physician could do nothing to relieve me; after suffering for three years, I thought, as I had been using St. Jacob's with good effect for rheumatic pains, I would try it. I saturated a piece of flannel large enough to cover my chest, with the oil and applied it. The relief was almost instantaneous. In one hour I was entirely free from pain, and would have taken the train to fill an appointment that night in a neighboring town had my friends not dissuaded me. As it was, I took the night train for home, St. Louis, and have not been troubled since."

The Boston Globe says: Charles S. Strickland, Esq., builder, No. 9, Boylston street and 106 Harrison avenue, Boston, thus speaks: "The pleasure which I hereby attempt to express can only be half conveyed by words. Physicians of very high character and noteriety have declared my rheumatism incurable. Specifics almost numberless, have failed to cure or even alleviate the intensity of the pain, which has frequently confined me to my room for three months at a time. One week ago I was seized with an attack of accute rheumatism of the knee. In a few hours the entire knee joint became swollen to enormous proportions and walking rendered impossible. Nothing remained for me, and intended to resign myself, as best I might to another month's agonies. By chance I learned of the wonderful curative properties of St. Jacob's Oil. I clutched it as a straw, and in a few hours was free from pain in the knee, arm and shoulder. As before stated, I cannot find words to convey my praise and gratitude to the discoverer of this king of rheumatism."

The Chicago Times says: "Everybody on the South Side knows J. D. L. Harvey, Esq., who has been a resident of Chicago for over twenty years. Mr. Harvey expressed himself on the "Oil subject" as follows: "I have spent over $2,000 to cure my wife of rheumatism. Two bottles of St. Jacob's Oil accomplished what all the medical treatment failed to bring about I regard it as a greater discovery than electricity. It is a boon to the human race, and I am very glad to have this opportunity of testifying as to its remarkable efficacy. I cannot speak to highly of it, and I would be recreant to my duty to those afflicted did I not lift up my voice in its praise."

The Philadelphia Ledger says: Mr. George I Graham, 820 Nineteenth street, Philadelphia, is a Journalist of many years experience, and is actively connected with the Philadelphia Sunday Mirror, a leading theatrical and musical journal. During the "late unpleasantness" Mr. Graham was Captain of Company K, One hundred and eighty-third Pennsylvania regiment, and through exposure in the field he contracted a variety of ills, and he says a very troublesome case of rheumatism in the right leg and foot was a war inheritence that he in vain tried to get rid of, until he was recommended to try St. Jacob's Oil. He states that he felt a slight relief even on the first application of the oil. Before the first bottle he purchased had been used up he had but few traces of his rheumatism, and at this time he says the disease has entirely left him, which he attributes entirely to the use of St. Jacob's Oil. He remarks; "No person need suffer from rhematism if St. Jacob's Oil can be obtained; to those who are afflicted with that complaint it is worth its weight in gold."

The Chicago Inter-Ocean says:—Captain Paul Boynton, the world renowned swimmer, thus speaks of the old German Remedy: "From constant exposure I am somewhat subject to rheumatic pains, and nothing would benefit me until I got hold of this old German Remedy. Why, on my travels I have met people who have been suffering with rheumatism for years; by my advice they tried the Oil, and it cured them. I would sooner do without food for days than be without this remedy for one hour. In fact I would not attempt a trip without St. Jacob's Oil, as I do not see how I can get along without it."

St. Jacob's Oil has been endorsed by persons of national reputation, who would not lend their names if they were not convinced that it was a duty they owed to suffering humanity; they have experienced the wonderful effect of the Great German Remedy, and they want their fellow creatures to know the result. We would only mention in this connection the Rt. Rev. Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, Ohio: "Excellent for rheumatism and kindered diseases; it has benifited me greatly." Mme. Marie Salvotti, Prima Donna ... Wilhelmi Concert ...

... for all emergencies; for the remedy is a true friend in need, and the occasion for its immediate use may come when it is least expected. Follow this advice, and it will not be long before you will join us in calling St. Jacob's Oil "A National Blessing."

[From our Exchanges.]

A lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen was organized here last Monday night, when the following gentlemen were duly installed as officers for the coming year:—Rev. Wm. Johnston, P.M.W.; Wm. SUDDEN DEATH.—We regret to chronicle the death of Mr. Jas. Lowe, 7th line St. Vincent. His death took place without the slightest warning on Wednesday morning, while playing with the children in his bed room. Mr. Lowe was a man about fifty-five years of age, of healthy appearance, and not at all such as would be expected to be taken off so suddenly. Heart disease is supposed to have been the cause of his death. He leaves a wife and family for whom much sympathy is felt. —Monitor.

BLACK FOX SHOT.—On Wednesday last, as Dr. Landerkin was out driving in this vicinity his hounds started a fox in the bush and getting in full chase the fox jumped upon a log near the road, when the Dr., who had his gun with him, fired at him from the buggy, bringing it down in quick time. The Dr. has now got the fine fox skin as a trophy. It is quite a prize, as black foxes are very rare.—Hanover Post.

A GOOD THING FROM THE STATES.

In this age of quackery, it is consoling to discover that there is something solid in existence, and that, though there are vendors who lie most cheerfully about their wares, there others who tell the truth and allow time to test the merits of what they offer for sale. As year after year rolls over, the frauds and the shams sink away out of sight in the pools and morasses of obscurity, while what is realy good and true stands boldly forth all the grander for its age and solidity. Thus while within the present decade thousands of patent medicines, puffed at one time to inflation, have shrunk before the test of analysis, ST. JACOB'S OIL has bravely borne the strain, and is to-day renowned all over the world for its famous curative powers. It is truly one of the phenomena ofs the age we live in. The sale of this article is incredible. It is to be found all over the civilized world and in a good many places not civilized—for unfortunately, the bones of sorrowing man are racked and ache with pain no matter what region he inhabits—and we believe it is yet destined to be found in every house, and to supercede the many nostrums which still remain abroad to rob and defraud humanity of its money and its health. The firm of A. Vogeler & Co., Baltimore, spend half a million dollars yearly in advertising ST. JACOB'S OIL, and hence we may guess at the full extent of their enormous business. It is truly marvelous, or would, did we not know the circulation of this inestimable blessing.

We are given to understand that J. Green, Esq., will be a candidale for the Mayoralty for 1882. If this rumor turns out to be correct, he should be elected. Orangeville requires as its Chief Magistrate who, from experience in business, will be able to guide the town affairs with a firm and intelligent hand. Lawyers and doctors are all very well and intelligent in their way, but a business man at the helm would be an advantage which the peple would do well to secure. Let us have a change from professionals to business men.—Gazette.

IT SAVED MY LIFE.

The value of human life is so supremely important that anything which tneds to its prolongation is entitled to the highest consideration. Speaking to us recently on this subject, Charles Nelson, Esq., proprietor Nelson house, Port Huron, observed: I suffered so with rheumatism that my arm withered, and physicians could not help me. I was in despair of my life, when some one advised me to try St. Jacob's Oil. I did so, and as if by magic, I was instantly relieved, and, by the continued use of the Oil entirely cured. I thank heaven for having used this wonderful remedy, for it saved my life. It has also cured my wife.—Port Huron (Mich.) Commercial.

PERCHERON HORSES.

This most popular of all breeds of large horses, is attracting the attention of nearly all the intelligent and progressive breeders of horses in this country. And their importations (from La Perche, France, where they have been bred for more than a thousand years,) are doubling and quadrupling annually.

Although but a few years has elapsed since their introduction they have proved themselves so far superior to all other breeds of heavy horses, as a cross upon our common and inferior mares, and even upon the half breeds and Bronchos of the far West, that they are sought after in every quarter of the United States, and large numbers are being introduced into Canada, to refine and give quality to the Clydesdale English draft horses, so long used here. The demand is so great, and has grown in so short a time, that it is difficult to supply it.

Probably the most astonishing improvement has been made in the Western States and Territories by crossing Percheron stallions of medium size and good quality upon the small mares of the range. The produce from these mares almost invariably weighing when mature from 1,000 to 1,400 pounds, possessing compactness, vigor and endurance beyond any thing of their size ever raised in this country; the sires giving size, uniformity, and the renowned docility of their race to the progeny, making them tractable and easily broken. By the introduction of the Percheron stallions a new and grand field seems to be opening for the large breeders of horses in the West, where horses can be raised for a nominal sum. The fact is, that these half and three-quarter blood colts sell on the Eastern market for higher prices than any other class of large horses, and are in urgent demand, at from $150 to $250 each, and choice ones command even larger prices.

This is a matter that should attract the attention of all breeders who desire to keep pace with the times, and breed horses that will sell when the commoner kinds are unsalable.—The Western Rural, Chicago.

LOCAL & OTHER NOTICES

Fine weather.

Christmas comes on Sunday.

If you wish to procure good Oatmeal, try Benson's—his is excellent.

Foster's Teas are becoming noted for their strength, flavor, and Cheapness.

Mr. Thos. Davis, Architect, who went to Ireland last summer has returned.

Wilson & Bryden have a lot of choice beef; hind quarters, 5 cts.; fore quarters, 4½ cts.

A time for everything, and now is the time to save money by buying your furniture at G. Grant's.

Toronto oil company, are sole manufacturers of "Castorine" machine oil. Infringements will be prosecuted.

An Orange Soiree at Berkeley on Thursday, the 8th. Admission 25ct. There is a good staff of speakers on the bills.

Ask your dealers for "Castorine" machine oil, and see that the barrel is branded. "Castorine," as none other is genuine.

Mr. Littlejohns, two miles south of this place, had his sheep worried by dogs on the night of the 14th ult. One of the sheep was killed.

Two new baggage and mail cars for the Toronto, Grey & Bruce standard gauge arrived in Toronto from the London Car Works on Friday last.

Aha! —Dentists who have tried "Teaberry," pronounce it the finest thing on the face of this earth for the teeth and breath. 5 cent samples.

Mr. Fred. Sarjeant has opened a butcher shop in the place recently occupied by W. B. Sarjeant, where he will carry on the business in all its branches.

Mr. Masson, of Owen Sound, found on his arrival at the station on Friday the 25th ult., that he was just in time to be too late, returned and procured a rig and drove down, arriving here ahead of the train.

Judging from the appearance of the mill at present Mr. Brown, the proprietor, means business. He is overhauling the mill from its very foundation and re-fitting it throughout. We bespeak for Mr. B. the success which his push and energy deserves.

Use "Castorine" Machine Oil, for all kinds of machinery, it is also excellent for harness and leather, making it water and weather proof. For sale by dealers.

"Arkansaw or Arkansas." It is immaterial which pronunciation is adopted in this case, but quite material that the citizens of Arkan^{saw}_{sas} with the rest of the United States and the Dominion should be supplied with good pens. Esterbrook's are popular, reliable and standard.

Manufacturers of reapers, mowers and threshing machines, prefer "Castorine" machine oil to any other, it will out wear lard, seal, or elephant, and is warranted not to gum.

Mr. T. E. Davis, Builder and Contractor, has just completed the brick work on Mr. Cornwall's residence, on ... street. It will, we believe, be one of the most convenient and well laid out dwellings in Markdale when finished.

There is a case reported in Montreal of a young man, who at one time was manager of the Dominion Telegraph office in that city, becoming such a slave of drink, that he actually stole the sheet that covered his father's dead body, to pawn it for liquor.

From the amount of goods daily arriving, it is evident that our merchants anticipate a good winter's business. From the good prices the farmers are getting for their produce, we have little doubt but that their anticipations will be fully realized.

If you wish to send a present to a friend or neighbor who lives in a distant part of the country, send them the STANDARD; it will only cost you a dollar, there are many doing it now, and no doubt many more would if they just take a thought how glad they would be to get it.

We have now got well established in our new premises, and everything in working order, and are now prepared to fill any order intrusted to us with promptness and in the best style of the art, and at prices that will compare with any other place in the county. Try us and we know you will be satisfied.

The American Agriculturist for December has been received. To say that it is fully up to the past issues, is all the praise needed for this really valuable periodical. It is a journal that should be in every household. It can be had in connection with the STANDARD for only One Dollar; call and see specimens and we feel sure you will subscribe.

The weather for the past week has been as variable as a woman's temper. Saturday and Monday the sleighing was pretty fair, and the farmers took advantage of it to rush in their grain and other produce for all they were worth, consequently our streets presented a lively appearance. At the present time of writing there is nothing but mud. Vennor's predictions for November have proved pretty correct.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Habitual Constipation, Biliousness, Liver and Kidney Affections, the safest and best remedy is Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, the great family medicine. They can with perfect safety be given to the youngest child as they are purely vegetable in composition and mild in their action. Sold in large panel bottles at 50 cents. A. Turner & Co. special agents for Markdale.

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry in great variety at Wilcox's, next door to Hill Bros.

We draw the attention of our readers to the card of John B. McMillan, Esq., Attorney, &c., to be found in another column.

The last engine for the Toronto Grey & Bruce of the complement of eight to be supplied by the Grand Trunk, arrived in Toronto from Montreal last Monday.

Mr. John McKay, who recently returned from Michigan, has purchased lot 78, con. 2, and lot 78, con. 3, Township of Holland, containing 82 acres, from Mr. Thos. Wiggins, for $1,500.

Spectacles to suit all sights at Wilcox's the Jeweler.

The cheapest Overcoats, Ulsters and Suits are purchased from W. J. McFarland. See his Job $5.00 Overcoats worth $7.00; see his boys' Ulsters at $5.00, worth $6.50; see his suits at $12.00, cheap at $14.00.

D. J. Shanahan calls special attention this week to his large stock of Cutters and Sleighs, and invites inspection. Read his advertisement in another column and then give him a call and judge for yourselves.

Special arrivals this week at McFarland's. New Raisins at McFarland's; new Currants at McFarland's; new Lemon and other peels at McFarland's; new Icing Sugars and flavoring extracts at McFarland's.

Lost.—On Sunday evening last, between Dunlop's Bakery and the Methodist Church, a Round Gold Brooch, with Black centre. If the party who found it will kindly leave it at Dunlop's Bakery, Mill street, they will be rewarded.

Should your eye light on this, what we want you to do is to read it, and then put a ten dollar bill in your pocket, walk straight to McFarland's and purchase a Black Silk Dress, a Cashmere Dress, a handsome shawl, Mantle or sett of Furs as a Christmas present, and make sure we feel happy.

As will be seen by reference to our advertising columns, Mr. J. L. Brown is now prepared to take photographs. He is said to be a first-class artist, and he guarantees satisfaction. Remember the place, over the new STANDARD office, Mill street.

For a stylish and comfortable Cutter, go to D. J. Shanahan, he is selling very cheap.

A. Turner & Co. announce in this issue of the STANDARD that they have received their annual supply of Fancy Goods, Books, Toys, &c., suitable for Christmas and New Year's presents. Call early, so you may have your pick before the best are gone.

People are beginning to find out the true virtues of Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, and they are becoming the favorite family medicine of the Canadian public for all derangements of the Stomach, Bowels, Liver and Kidneys. In large bottles, at 50 cents. A. TURNER & Co., special agent for Markdale.

The Rural New-Yorker, a weekly publication of 16 pages, has been received. It is published in New York City, and, as its name would indicate, treats on farming and rural affairs. It is one of the oldest agricultural papers on this continent, and ranks high. We would recommend it to our agricultural friends as a paper well worth taking. Subscription, $2 per annum. Address Rural New-Yorker, 34 Park Row, New York.

A PUBLIC MEETING Should be called of the citizens of every city, town and village in the Dominion, to consider what should be done to prevent the hair from turning Grey—and falling out. If this important question received their earnest consideration they would unanimously decide that science had at last discovered something that would answer this purpose—and furthermore would recommend Cingalese Hair Renewer as being this something for restoring the hair to its natural color, and prevent its falling out. 50 cents per bottle. For sale by all Druggists.

W. J. McFarland is receiving new goods every day, his cash sales for November this year exceeds by $1,000 his sales for the same month last year. This speaks volumes.

Some of our villagers are grumbling in no measured terms at our Police Trustees for permitting parties to obstruct the streets and side-walks.—They say they pay taxes to build side-walks and open streets for the use of the public generally, and not for private individuals to deposit lumber, cordwood, saw-logs and manure on. Where buildings are being erected more or less obstruction is unavoidable; but othewise there is no excuse, and the thing should be put a stop to. We had frequently to draw attention to this matter last winter, and had hoped we would not be called upon to perform this unpleasant duty again.

Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, are rapidly taking the place of all other purgatives, including Pills, Powders, etc. Their action is mild yet effectual and they are a certain cure for all billious complaints. In large bottles, at 50 cents. A. TURNER & Co., special agents for Markdale.

A BOLD THIEF.—On Sunday night thieves broke into Mr. Jas. Wales' grist mill, Oxenden, and carried away about half a ton of flour. They affected an entrance at a side window and conveyed their plunder off in a waggon. We understand there is no suspicion as to who are the guilty parties. The thief was boldly executed, which indicates plainly that the scoundrels were not novices at the game. People will require to keep their property well guarded while such characters are in the neighborhood.—Echo.

HENRY FOSTER.

THE OLDEST CITY IN THE WORLD.

Damascus is the oldest city in the world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore; Baalbec is a ruin; Palmyra is buried in a desert; Nineveh and Babylon have disappeared from the Tigris and the Euphrates. Damascus remains what it was before the days of Abraham—a centre of trade and travel—an isle of verdure in the desert; "a presidential capital," with martial and sacred associations extending through thirty centuries. It was near Damascus that Saul of Tarsus saw the light above the brightness of the sun; the street which is called Strait, in which it was said "he prayed," still runs through the city.

The caravan comes and goes as it did 1,000 years ago; there is still the sheik, the ass and the water-wheel; the merchant of the Euphrates and the Mediterranean still occupy the streets with the multitude of their wares. The city which Mohammed surveyed from a neighboring height and was afraid to enter because it was given to man to have but one paradise, and for his part he was resolved not to have it in this world, is to day what Julian called the Eye of the East, as it was in the time of Isaiah the head of Syria. From Damascus came the damson, our blue plums, and the delicious apricot of Portugal called damasso; damask, our beautiful fabric of cotton and silk, with vines and flowers raised upon a smooth, bright ground; the damask rose introduced into England in the time of Henry VIII.; the Damascus blade, so famous the world over for its keen edge and wonderful elasticity, the secret of whose manufacture was lost when Tamerlane carried the artist into Persia; and that beautiful art of inlaying wood and steel with gold and silver, a kind of mosaic engraving and sculpture united—called damaskeening—with which boxes bureaus and swords are ornamented. It is still a city of flowers and bright waters: the streams of Lebanon and the silk of gold murmur and sparkle in the wilderness of the Syrian gardner.—London Globe.

ONE EXPERIENCE FROM MANY.—I had been sick and miserable so long and and had caused my husband so much trouble and expense, no one seemed to know what ailed me, that I was completely disheartened and discouraged. In this frame of mind I got a bottle of Hop Bitters and used them unknown to my family. I soon began to improve and gained so fast that my husband and family thought it strange and unnatural, but when I told them what had helped me, they said "Hurrah for Hop Bitters! long may they prosper, for they have made mother well and us happy."—the Mother.—Home Journal.

A TRIBE OF TREE DWELLERS.

A French naval doctor, M. Crevaux, has lately made important explorations in the northern part of South America, more especially in the valley of the Orinoco and its affluents. Among other [illegible] of observation he states that the [illegible]enos, at the delta of the river, refuge in the trees when the delta is inundated. There they make a sort of dwelling with branches and clay. The women light, on a small piece of the floor, the fire needed for cooking, and the traveller on the river at night often sees with surprise long rows of flames at a considerable height in the air. The Guarannos dispose of their dead by hanging them in hammocks at the tops of trees. Dr. Crevaux, in the course of his travels, met with geophagists, or earth eating tribes. The clay, which often serves for their food for whole months, seems to be a mixture of oxide of iron and some organic substances. They have recourse to it more especially in times of scarcity; but, strange to say, there are eager gourmands for the substance, individuals [illegible] whom the depraved taste becomes so pronounced that they may be seen tearing pieces of ferruginous clay from the huts made of it, and putting them in their mouths.

WHAT TO STUDY.

Pope, the poetical philosopher said, "The proper study of mankind is man, and yet, how little is the real science of man studied. If people understood and heeded the laws of health, and if when out of sorts would resort to a common sense like Burdock Blood Bitters, many of the "ills that flesh is heir to" might be effectually remedied. It invigorates and regulates all the secretions to a healthy action.

A CANADIAN YOUNGSTER'S FIGHT WITH A WILD CAT.

Last Friday afternoon Abraham Holt, 11 years of age, encountered a wild cat while strolling through the woods in Sarnia Township, accompanied by a little dog. The animal was discovered crouching in the fork of a tree about twenty feet from the ground. Under the impression that it was an enormous black squirrel, he threw a stick at it, which caused it to spring from its elevated perch and land squarely on the boy's breast. The dog then sprang at the cat, causing it to let go its grip on the boy and fight the dog. The lad fortunately carried a large stick, which, by the time the cat had driven off the dog and again turned to attack him, he had recovered presence of mind enough to use with all possible vigor. For the next few minutes it was a triangular struggle, in which the cat fought desperately with the boy and dog, until at last a well aimed blow from the boy's stick on the side of savage brute's head ended its struggles. On examination the cat proved to be of a variety not recognized by any who inspected it as common to the locality. It measured about thirty inches in length, the fur being black and sprinkled with white hairs, and had a long bushy tail.—Port Huron Times.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Superceding as it does all other modes of illumination, and rivalled only by the glorious sunshine, will not be hailed with greater joy by mankind, than is Burdock Blood Bitters, which is as far superior to all other blood purifiers and tonics as the electric light is superior to the old fashioned tallow dip. Burdock Blood Bitters cures Scrofula, and all foul humors and impurities of the blood.

A MAORI MARRIAGE.

THE MUCH WEDDED NEW ZEALANDER [illegible] HIS WIFE.

A good clergyman who was working amongst the native population was anxious to establish the sanctity of marriage among them. Among others who were candidates for the rite was a much married aboriginal named Ngatapaparapara. On arriving at the clause of the formula were candidates for matrimony are directed to join hands, a strange scene occurred. No sooner had the directions been given than a whole bevy of inamoratas sprang forward, two or three hanging on by the hands and arms of the would be benedict, with an equal number clinging to his legs. He was completely besieged, pinned hand and foot and confusion was made worse confounded by a hugging and tugging by which the unfortunate fellow was in imminent danger of dismemberment. Seeing the turn things had taken the priest naturally enough paused, and looked on in dismay. "Go on," cried the hapless bridegroom, "or can't you see for yourself these abominable wretches will have me dragged from limb to limb?" Still the reverend gentleman hesitated, seemingly at a loss what to do under the circumstances. "If you don't get along, cried the man, "and have this kind of a thing to a finish, there'll be another dozen of them here less than no time, and, when they find I haven't got a flopper to hang on by, they'll drag off the last shred of blanketing I have over me."

The situation was now perplexing in the extreme, and there was nothing for it but to hurry over the service, and bring the comedy to an end. The sequel to the story is worth adding. In the course of time this much married man died, as did the seven times married woman of the Gospels. Then question then arose as to who was his lawfully married wife. Some five and twenty claimants appeared before the judge of the native law courts, and the question to be determined was—Had the woman who got hold of the deceased's hand precedence over her who merely tugged at his legs? As there was considerable property left behind, counsel were employed by the respective claimants, and it is said their learned disputations, on the respective importance of arms and legs, left the unfortunate judge in the dilemma of the man without a leg to stand upon.

HAGYARD'S YELLOW OIL.

Is at the head of the list for all purposes of a family medicine. It is used with unprecedented success, both internally and externally. It cures sore throat, burns, scalds, frost bites; relieves, and often cures asthma.

SIX HUNDRED VICTIMS OF WHISKEY.

The Corwin during her last voyage to Alaska landed on St. Lawrence Island, having orders to investigate the wholesale starvation of the natives. At the first village at which they landed all were dead; so also at the second, where 54 dead bodies were counted, nearly all full grown males. At another place 100 persons—men, women and children—were dead. At the next settlement twelve dead bodies, and at the following thirty were found. All the inhabitants on the north side of the island, where whiskey traders sold liquor, are dead, not one escaping. The general starvation occurred two years ago last winter. Since then the presence of the Corwin in the Arctic has broken up this inhuman whiskey trading. The empty whiskey kegs are seen strewn all about. The total number of dead bodies found on St. Lawrence Island was over 600. The survivors says that white traders from Honolulu sold whiskey, which the natives bought, and got drunk, remaining so during the season for laying in their winter supply of walrus and seal.

A RELIABLE FACT.

It is an established fact that Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam is the best cure for coughs, colds, sore throat, asthma, croup, bronchitis, and all troubles arising from neglected colds. Price 25 cents.

AN EAGLE'S ATTEMPT TO CARRY OFF A BOY.

Thursday morning John Abernathy brought a monster eagle into town, which he had killed on his place, four miles from Forsyth, Ga., the day previous. He had gone to a field to work, carrying his little son, twelve and a half years of age, with him. It happened that he had a shot gun in his hands, thinking that he would need it to kill game. Suddenly he heard a sound in the air, which he describes as equal to the roaring of the wind, and saw a large shadow on the ground. Looking up he saw a huge bird swooping down upon his son. As quick as possible he raised his gun and fired and was fortunate enough to bring the eagle to the ground. He picked him up and started homeward, carrying the bird on his shoulder. Suddenly the eagle buried his talons in his right arm and seized his left with his beak. Mr. Abernathy called for help, and some neighbors, four in number, came to his assistance.

It required their united efforts to release the bird from his firm hold. When relieved he found that his arm was badly lacerated, the flesh being torn from the bone in several places. The beak was sunk to the bone in the right hand. The eagle measured seven feet and four inches from tip to tip, and weighed seventeen and one-half pounds. He was never seen in the neighborhood before, and it is probable he strayed from the coast. Mr. Abernathy says his strength was prodigious. He would readily carried off the little boy had it not been that his father was fortunately armed with a gun.—Munro, Ga., Advertiser.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER.—Has the hearty commendation of thousands whose "turning locks" have been restored by it to their former beauty of color and growth. It is, in fact, a miracle in its way, even in this age of wondrous improvement—a fact to which every one who has given its virtues a test will certify. The proprietors, R. P. Hall & Co., are men of liberality and enterprise, who give the benefit of their discovery to the world at large, and have placed it in the hands of every druggist in the county, that its benefits may be extended alike to all. If there is the least suspicion of grey hair showing itself upon your head, go at once and procure a bottle of his celebrated Hair renewer.—Carthage, N. Y., Republican.

Ayer's

Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

IT is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

LITTLE CHILDREN.

There is music, there is sunshine,
Where the little children dwell;
In the cottage, in the mansion,
In the hut, or in the cell.
There is music in their voices,
There is sunshine in their love,
And a joy for ever round them,
Like a glory from above.

Little children! yes we love them,
For their spirits ceaseless flow;
For the joy that ever lingers,
Where their bounding footsteps go.
'Tis the sunshine of their presence
Makes the lowly cottage fair,
And the palace is a prison,
If no little ones are there.

Oh! I wonder not the Saviour,—
He the beautiful, the meek,—
To the precious little children,
Tender, loving words did speak,
'Tis a pleasant thing to teach them,
Unto Him to bend the knee,
Since he spoke the words of blessing
Suffer them to come to me.

Yes, of such is Heaven's Kingdom,
And if we would enter there
We must seek the sinless garment,
Which the little child doth wear,
Father! bless the little children,
Bless them everywhere they dwell;
In the palace, in the mansion,
In the hut, or in the cell.

May the clouds of sin and sorrow,
Never darken o'er their way;
And in heart may we be like them,
Pure and innocent as they.

Dundalk, Nov. 23rd, 1881.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

—:o:—

CHAPTER X. Continued.

'The sharp-sighted old baronet has been abusing me,' reflected Mr. Dantree; 'he has taken my gauge pretty accurately from the first. I wonderhow it is that my face, which makes all women fall in love with me, makes all men distrust me? Is it women as a rule are fools, and the other sex are not? What an awful muddle I nearly made of it by carrying that confounded pack of letters about. Katherine's a prey to the green-eyed monster already, and will be for the rest of her life. I suppose it is in the eternal fitness of things, somehow, that plain women should be always savagely jealous, especially when they have remarkable handsome husbands. Before the year ends I will be the son-in law of Scarsdwood Park, and the husband of eight thousand a year. Gaston Dantree, my boy, you're a clever er fellow than even I gave you credit for.'

There was a dinner party that evening at Scarswood, and Mr. Dantree, with a fatuous smile, made known to all whom it might concern that the happy day was near. Mrs. Vavasor's dark eyes sparkled with their snakiest light — the rustling silk twisted, and twined, and gleamde about her in more serpentince coils than ever. She flashed a glance across at Peter Dangerfield, who sat, with spectacles over pale, near-sighted eyes, on the opposite side. And Captain De Vere stroked again his big, heavy dragoon moustache, and shot sharp glances of suppressed ferocity at the smiling bridegroom elect.

'Hang the begger! I'd like to throttle him, with his self-satisfied grin and confident of proprietorship. I suppose Sir John's faling into his dotage —I can't account for it in any other way, poor little fool,' with a look at Katherine; 'if he treats her as I know he will treat her after marriage, I'll thrash him within an inch of his life, 'fore George! I wish I had asked her myself.'
